A BROADWAY BELLE WHO ATTRACTS ATTENTION.

Tillie Martin, a New York Society Belle, to Become the Guest of Mrs. Cleveland During the Winter—Discussing Manly Beauty as Seen at the Show — A Huge Venture.

NEW YORK, October 23.—[Special.]—A slim, erect, graceful girl of twenty, with a facial beauty that would satisfy a sculptor by its perfect regularity of features, an artist by its delicacy of coloring, and an ordinary observer by its complete loveliness, walked past me on Broadway this morning. She had the sort of personality that will bear something of exaggeration in costuming without producing a vulgar effect. There are women, you know, who can't wear the smallest checks for fear of loudness, while others can turn their surfaces into chess-boards without offense. This maiden was of the latter type, and so her ulster of broad squares in brown and black was becoming, and the Tam O'Shanter cap stuck on her sorrel hair askew was a delight. I don't say that she was singular in her attractiveness. Broadway is full of feminine beauty, and her equal could have been found on the next block or two, no doubt. But she was Miss Tillie Martin, who is to be an admired figure in the white house this season, unless I miss my guess. She is the daughter of Dr. Henry J. Martin, a New York physician, and niece of James Fulgate, the Patterson iron manufacturer, with whose wife she spent a portion of last summer at Saranac, in the Adirondacks. There she became well acquainted with the wife of President Cleveland, and they got to be very chummy after a schoolgirlish fashion. The upshot is an invitation to Tillie to stay a month or longer in Washington, a guest of Mrs. Cleveland. If she does not eclipse nearly everybody else in capitol belledom then account me no prophet. She is laying in a wardrobe that won't hinder her progress, I'll be bound; and her fresh beauty will conquer a tremendous vogue.

Another thing that I know beforehand about the Washington season, is that President Cleveland is going to be neater and nicer in his own attire at the state receptions. I mean no disrespect to his excellency when I say that he is naturally and by habit a slouchy sort of man. Bachelorhood, prolonged abnormally, is bound to make a fellow careless as to dress; and when a quadruple chin and segenty inches of girth bust measure obscure his view of his vest buttons, he can't easily know whether they are fast or loose. "You ought to have seen young Mrs. Cleveland finishing her husband's toilet," said a woman who saw them at Saranac. "One afternoon he lounged into the parlor, after the nap that he invariably took. His hair was rumpled, his necktie askew and one button of his coat was inserted in the buttonhole next below. He was a picture of don't careativeness. His pretty wife waylaid him at the entrance. With one gentle but rapid hand she smoothed his hair, while with the other she straightened his necktie. Instantly a twist of the fingers readjusted the buttoning of his coat, flecked some lint off his arm and gave a twist to his moustache. It was the deft work of about thirteen seconds, but how radically improving. The president was transformed from a slouch to a state of neatness. Therefore, Mr. Cleveland will be touched up by his wife this winter in Washington, and vastly to his betterment as an object for social contemplation.

Is unfitness in dress a peculiarity of American women? Are the women of other nations as insensible to the incongruous as are ours? These questions were suggested by the scene in a basement room of one of the large stores in this city. There were hundreds of women passing in and out and strolling from one counter to another, and among them were worn some of the handsomest street toilets I ever saw. Often was the eye almost blinded by the sparkling of jet in the electric light, and satins, velvets, plushes of all colors formed a moving kaleidoscope. The department was one for housekeeping goods, and some of those gorgeously arrayed [illegible] were selecting chopping bowls, [illegible] tin pans, fire shovels, etc. The climax was reached when through an opening in the throng I saw a young woman whose toilette was largely made up of white watered silk and lace, poising a black buttoned kettle with a daintily gloved hand! Her costume would have answered for an elegant reception, perhaps she intended going to one after purchasing a preserving kettle to send home to Bridget. Or, was it Bridget herself sent on this errand masquerading in her mistresses best suit? I tried to see the features more closely, but the passing train hid her from view and my question has never been satisfactorily answered. I hope it was Bridget!

Handsome women are subjects for critical judgment, especially when they appear on the stage, but did it ever occur to you that these professional beauties might have views of masculine beauty as they see it from their side of the footlights? On thinking of it yesterday, I at once set out in a hansom to do a bit of interviewing. My first call was on Fanny Davenport, and I put the question plumply to her: "Who is the handsomest man you have ever seen in one of your audiences?" "Ned Price," she promptly replied. "But he is your husband." "To be sure, but that doesn't alter the fact." Mr. Price is a well built chap, aged thirty-seven, I should guess, and his face is indeed very bright and admirable. In attire he is something of a beau. Next, I went to Madam Mojeska with my query. She too, was inclined to vow supreme admiration of her husband, but I told her that I had taken that kind of reply once and for all. Then she said: "Well, the handsomest auditor I can remember was Mr. Nicholas Smith, the husband of one of Horace Greeley's daughters. He used to go to the theater a great deal, and usually sat in a box, where he was conspicuous to me, of course. He was a big, lion like man, with a positively beautiful, yet manly face. Yes, I think Mr. Smith is the handsomest man I ever saw across the footlights." Finally I visited in turn the four British beauties who have come across the brine to us. The first of them was Lord Lonsdale's Violet Cameron. "Do you restrict your question to the gentlemen whom I have acted to in America? Well, then I fancy that I can't tell you his name, but I can describe him to you. He sat the other night near the front of the orchestra, where I had a good view of him. He was tall, and just portly enough to be impressive; he was somewhere nigh thirty; his features were strongly regular, with black hair, and a matchlessly brunette complexion; his toilet was absolutely faultless. Perhaps you can identify him?" I could, easily. He was Aurelius Sharp, and very fashionable in Fifth avenue, though scarcely in a society way, for he conducts a tailoring establishment. Wilson Barrett's principal actress, Miss Eastlake, gave the palm of her highest admiration to Lester Wallack. I tried to shake her verdict by impeaching it with the charge that, as he was a theatrical manager, and was advantageously exhibited to her in a private box, but she declared that she rendered it judicially. Wallack is now white-haired, and his face is that of a veteran, but his air is so bewitchingly distinguished, and he retains so much of the beauty that made him an idol a quarter of a century ago, that I could readily justify Miss Eastlake's decision. May Fortescue had in mind a man who had sat three rows from the front on the previous evening. He was a strawberry blonde, but she did not know his name, and I couldn't place him.

It was seven o'clock in the afternoon when I alighted at the residence of Mrs. Langtry. A crowd was around the place, and that is the case every day about the time she starts for the theater. A free show of the famous beauty, though limited to her skurry from door to carriage, seems to repay waiting for. She laughed at my question, and then meditated awhile, as though marshalling a long line of handsome men past the eye of her memory. "The most beautiful man I recall from all my audiences in America, or indeed anywhere else bears the unpoetic name of Smith, I believe. Describe him? Yes; he had a face at once masculine and beautiful—not brown mustache curled just enough—nose slightly Roman, but symmetrical—soft brown eyes—a model head—a kindly expression; and about thirty-five." His name was not exactly Smith, though, but Schmidt—Edwin P. Schmidt—noted as the handsomest man in Wall street. I am told that he made half a million in Northern Pacific along with Villiard, and has lost it all in other gambles; but finance is beyond my field, and I am sure he is nowhere near bankruptcy in beauty.

CLARA BELLE.

Personal Gossip.

NEW YORK, October 23.—[Special.]—It is said that various couples, especially among the jeunesse doree and the theatrical profession, who were married by registering themselves as man and wife, will find relief in a recent decision of Judge Churchill's regarding this proceeding in the famous Charles A. Davis—Alvin Joslyn—case. Some time ago one of the judges on the same bench held that a man's publicly acknowledging a woman as his wife established claims on him for that recognition, and many men who have been entrapped while on a spree will now seek liberty under Judge Churchill's decision. The first that will create a sensation will be another actor not less famous than Alvan Joselyn, whose display of diamonds has made him remembered in every place he has visited. While on a spree with a noted beauty he in his momentary infatuation acknowledged her as his wife, and believing there was no escape from the bond that he had thus woven about himself, he continued to parade her as his lawful spouse. Judge Churchill holds that for the welfare of society some more stable condition must be imposed on the woman, or else man will be at the mercy of designing women, while the innocent will be imposed upon.

Chatting with some lawyers the other day, Edward Lanterbach, who has been prominent in so many "corporation cases," observed: "I think the two most interesting clients I have ever had are Edward Stokes and Franklin B Gowen. Stokes is one of the most self-reliant, courageous, indomitable men I have ever known. In the telegraph cases he mastered the points as completely as any of us lawyers; he is an unrelenting foe and seems to be in great luck. He is the only man who is worthy of Gould's steel, and the telegraph fight will yet narrow to one between these two. Mr. Gowen is one of the most magnetic men I have ever met. He is an able lawyer, an eloquent advocate, and has sacrificed all personal interests in his service of Reading. It is a fault he is visionary and ahead of his times. With all his commanding abilities he is as modest and unobstrusive as a country boy."

Such a nuisance has the fashionable high bonnet become in the theaters—it is impossible for any one sitting in the rear to see over them and not always possible to keep out of their range—that, at the suggestion of Manager Augustin Daly, several society leaders, like Mrs. John Bigelow, will introduce a theatrical bonnet—a flat head covering that will permit an unobstructed view of the stage by those behind. You make think this a joke, but it is not. If the fashionable high hat which, according to all accounts, is to be higher than ever this season, continues to be worn in the theaters, the managers will have to pyramidically raise their seats or confine the ladies to the back row.

In a divorce case before a referee the correspondent, a prominent picture dealer, was the discarded suitor of the wife, who, yielding to parental influence, transferred her affections to another. Having obtained satisfaction, it is said that the discarded lover takes no more interest in the case, while the husband wishes he or his wife would die and so end the unpleasant disclosures.

Lord Lonsdale refuses to be interviewed now on the Bensaude case, testily saying, "Oh, that's played out," and his valet, who is as much a character as his lordship himself, and, it may be added, as enthusiastic a defender and admirer of Miss Cameron, declares, "He's no good—even for an advertisement!" It may turn out yet that the scandal was devised and resorted to as an advertisement, as while they abuse each other in print Lord Lonsdale and Bensaude hobnob together in private, and Miss Cameron keeps serenely in the even tenor of her lordly way.

Every time there is a political struggle certain political strikers always start a "Flower boom" or a "Starin boom," and one being democratic and the latter republican, each side once in a while has a picnic. The republican boys are not received any more by Mr. Starin, and to a delegation that proposed to him to go for the united democratic nomination for mayor Mr. Flower replied: "If it is tendered to me all right, I'll accept; but I'll not spend a cent to get it!"

A recent order of General Eckert's to the effect that the young lady operators must not permit the attention of gentlemen while on duty was the result of numerous complaints that in certain uptown hotel offices there was generally a dude flirting with the fair operator, to the annoyance and inconvenience of the customers, several of whom united in a communication to the main office.

JOHN D'ARME.

Nym Crinkle Talks About Actresses.

NEW YORK, October 23.—[Special.]—I saw Lord Lonsdale standing in front of the Casino the other morning. He was dressed in a cutaway coat, and it was blowing a stiff winter breeze. No one paid the slightest attention to him and he looked rather lonesome. The Violet Cameron opera season has been a business failure apparently, and public interest in the whole affair has suddenly died. It is difficult now to get anybody to talk about it at all.

Mr. Frohman, the manager of the other British celebrity, Miss Fortescue, who has appeared at the Lyceum, took a hint and adopted another course with his star. Two days before she made her debut here he managed to get himself interviewed, and said the reason why Miss Fortescue had not accepted the pressing invitations of the Lorillards to spend a few weeks at Tuxedo park was that she had sprained her ankle.

The only British celebrity who doesn't offend society nor toddy to it is the Langtry. She combines in herself the most gracious independence with the most discreet silence. Her little home in Twenty-third street is a most admirable mingling of the English family circle and the Bohemian symposium. Her little breakfasts provide a charmed group, in which the polished and courtly Ned Gilmore sometimes breaks a scholarly lance with the erudite Lee Lynch, and Wilson Barrett and Charles Coghlan discuss "Hamlet" and eggs in Chesterfieldian periods. Langtry herself is not what you can call a vivacious or brilliant woman. But for all that she has a social charm peculiarly her own. I never met a man who had been in her company half an hour who did not acknowledge her charm without being unable to clearly account for it. She does not, like some professional women, throw herself at you, so to speak. She never gushes, and she doesn't do the mental clinging trick so effective with the "low-lidded blondes of Briton." I think her charm for men is her unaffected manner and her air of wholesome naturalness. Her demeanor no less than her appearance is unpainted. You never suspect her conversation or her face of powder. She does not build up her sentences or her body. She doesn't overdress her language or her person. This is so unlike an actress that it strikes deep. I had the opportunity to study her one morning at breakfast, and summed her up as a very sensible, level-headed, healthy woman, than which I cannot think of anything more charming.

A well known lady of society not long ago was listening to her praises in a group of gentlemen, and she interposed the remark, "But Langtry has no art, you know."

Up went every man's hand and voice, and a simultaneous chorus answered:

"That's why we like her!"

The syndicate of showmen that is now in possession of Madison Square garden are preparing an exhibition there, to open next month, which will be of unusual magnitude and startling novelty. It is no less a scheme than the utilization of Buffalo Bill's Wild West in a series of dramatic spectacles and dramas that is to picture the history of our civilization in its westward fight with barbarism. We are to have the original Indian tribes, the arrival of the settlers, the ambuscades, surprises, massacres, the prairie fires, stampedes of wild animals; the cyclone's destruction of the camps by the elements, and finally the great fight of Custer and the Indians on the Little Big Horn. Over 200 Indians and cowboys are to be employed in this spectacle and about 100 soldiers and as many horses. Mr. Steele Mackaye has been at work for a month preparing the scene, and the well known artist, Matt Morgan, is here from Cincinnati painting the scenery. The principals in this venture are the popular circus man, Forepaugh, Mr. Nate Salsbury and William Cody. The enterprise, I am told, will entail an outlay of over $50,000.

NYM CRINKLE.

A New Industry.

NEW YORK, October 23.—Special.]—A year ago there were three or four "woman's tailors" on and near Fifth avenue, and there was one in Brooklyn. Their signs read simply, "Donnelly, Robes," or some such legend equally unenlightening. And these were not exactly woman's tailors. They were simply men dressmakers, like Worth in Paris, and were trading on the popular idea set afloat by Worth that a man has more taste and originality and boldness in designing than women possess. But now there are twenty-four men dressmakers above Fourteenth street. They do not adopt the old Shakespearean phrase, "the woman's tailor," but proudly dub themselves 'ladies' tailors" in letters of gold and of boastful dimensions. And the number is constantly increasing, as one sees by the little signs the men's tailors are adding to their former shingles so as to make them announce "Also riding habits and costumes for ladies." In a word, the signs on Broadway and Fifth avenue announce a social revolution, though any one with eyes to see can read the same thing in the attire of the women without looking at the signs at all. Everywhere up town cloth jackets that fit like jerseys and ulsters that are molded to the graceful, rounding figures of the ladies, as men can scarcely hope or wish their overcoats to be, inclose the persons of all well dressed women. It is impossible for any man (except a woman's tailor) to judge whether the new fashion is or is not a good one. I would not give a fig for the opinion of a man so dull that he could see half a dozen Murray hill girls, who have strained art and poured out money in order to look their best, and then could express any but the one opinion. Amid the rack and stress of shifting fashions since I have been among them each alternation in their gowns has seemed to make them more and more entrancing.

What brought about this revolution? Well, first the jersey, which made a display of the outline of the figure fashionable, and then the demand for an equally tight fitting overgarment to keep up the accurate exposure of outline when the weather called for something outside and on top of the jersey. The men's tailors were called upon to construct these feminine "ulsters," as they were called. These tailors got extra prices for this new work and liked it (that is, the extra prices) so well that they enlarged their signs to attract more ladies. This encroached on the field of the men dressmakers, who then hired tailors and also altered their signs. Thus the words "ladies' tailor" appeared on the signs of two sets of tradesmen. And thus, also, came it to pass that the original men's tailors went on from making ulsters to making dresses and the men dressmakers, became the makers of tailor-made garments of all sorts.

It is interesting to visit one of these ladies' tailor shops, as I did yesterday. Here were trousers by the score hung in a line on hooks, like beeves before a butcher's stall, and across the room were great glass cases filled with ladies' jackets and skirts, blazing with embroidery in gold, with gaudy ribbons and with buttons big as butter dishes. A helpless dude with his coat off and one arm out stiff, like a mail bag catcher on a postal car, was being measured for a coat in the thick of a bevy of circling ladies, one of whom stood on a low platform, while a young girl encircled her with a tape measure, and the great woman's tailor talked of whalebones, linings, flounces and I don't know what not. Over in a corner, through the parting of a curtain, peeped a white and pink suggestion of the shoulder of another lady trying on a dress.

JULIAN RALPH.

Our Girls—A New Idea.

From Hearth and Home.

One of the greatest curses of this intellectual age is the great lack of proper education of our girls in the practical affairs of every day life. They all want to be "schoolmarms," governesses, or the wives of rich men. Housework, which should form the basic principle of our economic life, is shunned by them as something degrading. A young woman will stand behind a dry goods counter fourteen hours a day for a mere pittance—not enough to clothe her—lose her health, become anæmic and unfitted for the performance of her natural duties, rather than accept a position as a domestic, where she would have a comfortable home, good health and become properly fitted for the duties of a wife and mother. The ranks of the unfortunate are filled with shop girls, who, having no place to spend their evenings, seek the parks and beer gardens, where young men, as it were, lie in wait for them as their natural prey. How many young women can trace their downfall to this misplacement of their talents? Good domestics and wives who are good cooks are so rare that when one is found she is worth her weight in gold.

We have schools in which our girls are taught cooking, embroidery, music, painting, school teaching, the languages, but positively not one in which is taught the art of housekeeping. Why? Simply because of the prejudice against it. Yet all girls desire to get married, which is very easy to do, but it is very, very difficult to live happily in marriage; and where the wife has no knowledge of the art of housekeeping, domestic economy, or is a poor cook, be her husband as rich as Crœsus, her lot will be miserable. Such a woman is totally incompetent to be a wife; her proper place is in some garret "singing the song of the shirt." While a man admires womanly beauty, yet in married life he admires much more a good square meal, cooked by the hands of his wife or under her immediate directions. What we mean by a good square meal is not simply roast beef and potatoes, with a piece of indigestible pie and a cup of ordinary coffee, but a table covered with snow white linen, the china and glassware shining like so many miniature mirrors, with boquets of fresh blooming flowers in season, and napkins fresh and soft from the laundry, not stiff as pasteboard, so that they will slide from your knee. These preparations cost but a triffle and are the invariable precursor of a good appetite. No dish should be served undecorated, the fish and meat should be surrounded with small pieces of either parsley or beets, carrots or turnips cut by molds into various knick knack devices, not so much for eating as for ornamentation, and also an appetizer. For puddings, melons, etc., pulverized sugar should always be at hand, and for iced tea a slice or two of lemon with granulated sugar. These and a thousand and one other little things we could mention concerning the table, cost no more than the slovenly served, appetite destroying foods of the present time. Cleanliness of the table should be comportant with cleanliness of the body. Such a table would never fail to make home the abiding place of true love and solid comfort.

But as we have no schools for teaching the above art what are we to do? Why not establish one, establish a dozen, yes, and in every city and in every village. Have it a school of practical housekeeping. Instruct the pupils in every department from the scrubbing of the front door steps to the mysteries of the kitchen. Run it actually as a boarding house. Issue diplomas of graduation to your servant pupils after a two, three or four years course. Having each pupil begin by forming the most menial labor, and by degrees advancing until she is thoroughly qualified in every department of the scullery, chamber, laundry and kitchen. Have her do practical work, not work in theory. Take in boarders, charge good prices, give first class service, and as Colonel Sellers would say, "there's millions in it." Will any of our readers take the hint? A diploma from such an institution would insure marriage, and what is still better, happiness in marriage.

ATLANTA, GA., October 1st, 1886.

We have this day sold our wholesale grocery and commission business to Messrs. J. O. Scannell & Co., agents.

In retiring from the business, we desire to thank our friends and patrons for their liberal patronage extended us, and to bespeak for our successors whom we recommend most cordially to the trade as being in every way worthy of their confidence, a continuance.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH OF THE PENNSYLVANIA STATESMAN.

Something About the Present Political Situation in Pennsylvania — Randall as a Presidential Possibility — His Strength at Home — About His Home Life, Etc., Etc.

PHILADELPHIA, October 23.—[Special.]—There are dozens of books in which one may read that Samuel Jackson Randall was born in Philadelphia, October 10, 1828, was elected to the Pennsylvania senate as a democrat in 1856, and has represented a Philadelphia district in the house of representatives ever since 1862. Thousands of campaign documents tell and have told how he represents the protection wing of his party, which does not always flap with the other one; how he made a brave and successful fight against the force bill; how he became speaker, and how, as chairman of the committee on appropriations, he has saved ever so many millions and millions to the country. But it is not facts like these that show what manner of man one is, nor is it details like these that make a life interesting and bring a career home to the hearts of the people. So conspicuous a figure in the eye of the public as the democratic president maker, the Warwick of protection, the most singular, if not the most prominent, representative of the political methods of the second city in the union, must surely be worth viewing from more sides than one.

Since the republicans of his district have formally determined not to put up a republican in opposition to his return to congress, Mr. Randall's re-election, is, of course, conceded, but his political future is fraught with far more consequence than a seat in congress. The campaign in the state is Randall's campaign, made by Randall's friends, and if Black is elected governor of Pennsylvania, it would be Randall's victory. And if Blaine hadn't came into the state when he did, Black would have been elected. As it is, he has a chance yet. Two thirds of the laboring men of Pennsylvania will vote for Black, because the Pennsylvania railroad company and all the great coal and iron corporations are fighting him. A plan has been formed to organize the laboring men and have them vote solidly for Black. The upshot of this plan no one can tell yet. The leaders of organized labor often betray it at the most critical moment. I have evidence that Knights of Labor who were delegates to the Richmond convention regularly sold the secrets of their order to reporters for $25 a day. If Black is elected, Randall will be Cleveland's most formidable in convention for the democratic nomination for the presidency.

Randall's friends are already arranging this. Randall will speak for Hewitt in New York. Randall's southern trip is talked of again. The rise of protection in the south is being harped on.

Samuel J. Randall in a nation of politicians who divide themselves under the banners of democracy and republicanism, enjoys the unique distinction of being classed as a republican by many democrats, and as a democrat by most republicans. In the life of such a one, who makes presidents, even if he has never himself sat in the white house, and who in his committee room has exercised more power than the chief magistrate in the executive mansion, there must be romantic undercurrents and powerful characteristics well worth study.

Mr. Randall has been all his life a Philadelphian and has never resided anywhere but here and in Washington. He has always been to the politicians of the city "Sam" Randall, and even now when he returns from Washington it is the "boys," the plain, practical politicians, such as "Broken Nose John Donahue," "Peto" Munroe, "Hughey" Mackin, "Mart" Killacky, "Mike" Egan, and "Sam" Josephs, that gather at his office, claim and occupy his attention. There are old fashioned democrats, who have never been ward politicians nor trained with "Squire" McMullen and the fire laddies of the fighting fourth ward, such as Hon. Richard Vaux, irreverently called "Dicky"—behind his back—a gentleman of wealth, social position, irreproachable character and high public record. It is Mr. Vaux's misfortune to belong to what is called the "kid glove" democracy. He and his friends have felt with every democrat the country over profound pride in the career of the congressman from the fourth ward. They have watched him grow from a hanger-on at the polls in the old whig days and an orator at engine-house caucusses to be member of city councils, then to be state senator, then to be congressman, then to be speaker! They have seen how highly he was esteemed in the south and in New York, and how his services as a campaign orator are sought sedulously in other states. And they have desired to fraternise with and honor among themselves this shining example of democratic principles. But the impracticability of "standing in" with the "Mikes" and "Tims" seems to have daunted them.

Among his friends, the business of the day or hour, dispatched, there is no more wholesoled friend of good fellowship than Randall. For whole days and nights he has been known to labor over an appropriation bill. When that was done, he relaxed. He has been known to relax frequently.

There was, not long since, the McLaughlin dinner party, given by the publisher of the Philadelphia Times to ex-Governor Curtin, Hon. James R. Young, executive clerk of the senate; Congressman H. H. Bingham, Hon. David W. Sellers, counsel for the Pennsylvania railroad company; Mr. James Elverson, the well known publisher; Mr. Frank Richardson, Mr. H. J. Ramsdell and Mr. Samuel J. Randall. What took place at that dinner has been concealed as far as possible by all present. But no one who was there will deny these facts. During the evening Governor Curtin and General Bingham related a number of interesting war reminiscences. Bingham, who was on Hancock's staff and greatly admired him, said the superb soldier was much opposed to the election of any other than Lincoln to succeed him in '64. Although a democrat and a friend of McClellan, Hancock wanted Lincoln elected on the non-partisan and patriotic ground that a change in the executive at that time would injure the union cause and imply to some minds a lack of confidence in the conduct of the war. At this moment Mr. Randall roused up and advanced toward Bingham with language of a warlike character, declaring his intention, in so many words, to "do" him "up." The savoire faire of the host soon restored tranquility and Mr. Randall was excused on the ground that the dinner had been a long one and the journey over from Washington a merry one.

At no distant date from the occasion just mentioned, at a dinner by Colonel Duffy, of Marietta, Pa., to the famous Farmers' club, Mr. Randall was a guest, and again mentioned late in the evening, his desire to "do up" another guest.

The fact is, that Mr. Randall's district was mapped out for him in just this way:

Mackey, the representative of the Pennsylvania railroad company, as well as of the republican machine of Philadelphia, took the republican legislature of Pennsylvania by the throat and said: "You have got to make a sure district for Sam Randall!" This was done at the instance of Tom Scott, whose Texas Pacific schemes were then about to be put through congress, and who, it was thenceforth expected, would have an ardent supporter in Mr. Randall. But in point of fact, Mr. Randall absolutely and consistently refused to do Scott's wishes. Now, what can "sorehead" democrats expect from a man's party obligations when he so sternly disregards what many would consider such binding personal obligations?

It is not, therefore, to the democratic party alone that Mr. Randall owes his district, nor to the republican party, nor to a railroad corporation. He represents the people, and as for his election, he could, concededly, be elected without democratic votes. It is well known here that if the republican business men of Philadelphia thought there was any real danger of Sam Randall's defeat they would turn in and raise money and exert influence, and ballot votes which would put him over the fence in a canter.

So, it is said by his friends, what does it matter if all that has been said of him is true, can anyone accuse him of having ever done a corrupt or a dishonest thing? And there has never been anybody to make such an accusation. Even if he does associate at Washington with "Al" Fletcher and "Mike" Sullivan, and in Philadelphia ignore such men as Hon. "Dicky" Vaux, who in 1880 went to Harrisburg and put Randall on top and Wallace underfoot in Pennsylvania politics, where is the taint on his public career? Remove Randall, and wouldn't the democratic party be committed to free trade inside of three years? Hasn't he time and again antagonized the liquor dealers, who are so powerful in his district? Didn't he even go so far as to decline to allow manufacturers in his district to send him money to help his election as the champion of the protective tariff? When he was candidate for speaker against M. C. Kerr didn't Jay Gould come to him and say: "Mr. Randall, I am glad to hear that you are going to be elected speaker, and there is just one thing I have to ask of you, let me name the chairman of the railroad committee," and didn't Mr. Randall refuse to do anything of the kind, and consequently suffer defeat at Mr. Gould's hands?

This is what Mr. Randall's friends very justly say.

Look at the man and see some of his salient points. He is more than six feet high, bent slightly as he is, and weighs more than two hundred pounds. His gray hair is gone from a space as big as your hand on top of his massive head. He has a smooth face, bull dog features and beetling brows. His eyes flames like a torch when he is excited. He complains often, very often lately, of "gout," which his enemies say is indisposition produced by conviviality. He is and has been an extraordinarily lucky man. Since Blaine left the house he has had few peers there, no superior in knowledge of the rules and tactics, and the various departments of the government. Even people who disliked him had to begin to toady to him when he became speaker. As chairman of the appropriation committee, his power has since been almost autocratic. He may be niggardly, may and does deal largely in cheeseparing economy, and get the hatred of people who have claims and who like liberal appropriations; but their hatred is an excellent campaign document for him. He is the only democrat in congress from Philadelphia, and an able leader, "chock full" of fight. He has great faith in the bone and sinew, the "boys" of his party. He has been always the idol of "Squire" McMullen, the great democratic boss of the fourth—Randall's—ward, and now that by Broken-nose John Donahue's defeat Squire McMullen's power is believed to have been broken Randall is still as powerful as ever.

A word of his home life. As soon as the end of the congressional session permits him, Mr. Randall goes quietly with his large family to his country home near Paoli, on the Pennsylvania railroad, about seventeen miles from Philadelphia. There he leads a quiet domestic existence whenever the cares of state—or ward—do not call him to town. And it looks now as if Mr. Randall's antagonists propose to call him to town pretty frequently.

Autumn Finery.

The small pereline mantels are more in vogue than ever.

Velvet striped broche silks come among fall dry goods importations.

Vertical stripes in dress goods of all kinds are the feature in fall fabrics.

Some of the new plush broche bordered woolen stuffs are as rich and dressy, as well as costly, as silk velvet broche.

The leading military materials will be plush, velvet and thick ribbed goods not unlike what was formerly called velour.

The basques in frocks imported for winter wear have pointed fronts and postillion backs, and are very short at the sides.

Handkerchiefs trimmed with lace and elegantly embroidered, of a style in vogue fifty years ago, are coming into fashion again.

Jerseys are now cut in the same style as ordinary dress waists, and are very handsomely finished, with whalebone in all the seams, and an inside belt.

There is a new guipure flouncing, of exquisite quality and finish, that has raised effects on the thicker portions of the lace not unlike small sections of fine crochet passamenterie.

The narrow plaiting at the bottom of the skirt is not altogether discarded, although it is not seen upon all of the new styles. A newer fancy is a bias fold of the goods set on in the same way.

Both plush and velvet are used to form applied designs on rich black cloth costumes; and make very elegant panels and bands for decorative purposes. The design is outlined in silk, dotted with beads.

Catarrh Cured

Catarrh is a very prevalent disease, with distressing and offensive symptoms. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives ready relief and speedy cure, from the fact it acts through the blood, and thus reaches every part of the system.

"I suffered with catarrh fifteen years. Took Hood's Sarsaparilla and I am not troubled any with catarrh, and my general health is much better." I. W. LILLIS, Postal Clerk Chicago & St. Louis Railroad.

"I suffered with catarrh 6 or 8 years; tried many wonderful cures, inhalers, etc., spending nearly one hundred dollars without benefit. I tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, and was greatly improved." M. A. ABBEY, Worcester, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

Secret Organizations

For many years, even until within a very short time, a popular prejudice existed against all secret organizations. Recently they have increased in numbers both of orders and members, to such an extent that a more thorough knowledge of the benefits of their existence has been disseminated, and to-day they are a very popular form of association for social, charitable and labor interests. Such bodies as have, by the social benefits they confer, and the charity they dispense, by their care of the sick, and the help they render the families of deceased members, changed the whole public sentiment towards such societies.

So with the

which attends the formulas of a popular medicine. When a remedy has been tried and proven to be of inestimable value as a curative agent, then the fair-minded public acknowledge the rights of makers and owners in the secret of its preparation, and endorse the medicine. The more distinctly the case with such a popular blood-purifying and strengthening preparation as

Brown's Iron Bitters.

For all diseases of the blood it has been tried, and its efficacy proven. For all disorders of the stomach, it has been employed with success. For all derangements of the liver, it has furnished relief, and it has been found to be the only reliable strengthener of weak and inflamed kidneys. This has given it the praises of the people, the endorsement of druggists, and caused it to be prescribed by even the most conservative of physicians. The principle sought for by all, and found only by the Brown Chemical Co.—a proper form of iron to combine with approved vegetable alteratives in such a manner as to successfully remove all impurities from the blood, to strengthen and tone it when vitiated, weak and watery, and at the same time not to produce constipation and headache—this principle of combination, found only in contains all of secrecy there is in the preparation. From this really comes the great benefits derived from its use in all diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys, and to it is due its unparalleled success as a family remedy in cases of dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, headache, nervous troubles, female complaints, as well as rheumatism and neuralgia. It will not cause nausea, and it will not injure or discolor the teeth. All other iron medicines do. Never before has it been possible to accomplish so much good with any single remedy as can be done with this. And why? Because no pains have been spared to procure the best and most effective of the known medicinal agents for purifying and strengthening the blood. No means have been omitted to procure the best skill and the greatest knowledge to aid in its preparation; and lastly, it has not been the aim in producing to see how cheap a preparation could be made, but it has been the sole object to discover how effective a remedy could be produced. We freely and declare that no other remedy works such remarkable cures, and no other medicine has so many endorsements of its effectiveness, endorsements being constantly received and unsolicited. This being the case, reader, why need you or your friends suffer?

Brown's Iron Bitters,

You can procure a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters anywhere. The price is only one dollar a bottle. Give a trial to the medicine, which all who have tried say is a sure cure for dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, headache, rheumatism and neuralgia. That medicine is

DAYS OF DELIGHT

SPENT ON A COACH TOP IN ENGLAND.

Travel at Its Best—A Charming Trip Through One of the Most Interesting Portions of England—How a Party of American Tourists Saw the Old Country—Interesting.

Of all the methods of travel yet devised by man, surely none affords a fuller measure of enjoyment than coaching. The coach has been driven by the railroad from the realm of general utility, but no innovation can impair its popularity as the vehicle of pleasure. While it affords the best possible opportunity for the view and study of scenery, it gives the exhilaration of the open air, the pleasing sensation of rapid motion, and, best of all, the society of select and congenial spirits.

England is the coaching ground of the world. Its perfect roads run in every direction through scenes of historic interest, through beautiful evidences of prosperity and culture, through the magnificent ruins of a past civilization, and through the still more magnificent monuments of a civilization which is now flourishing. It is the just ambition of every young American to visit "the mother country" to which we owe so much, despite what we have done for ourselves, and despite the fact that we never began to grow strong and great until we broke away from her maternal control. There is in this desire as entertained by persons of sense and culture in the United States nothing of that idiotic idolatry of everything foreign which makes a certain class of Americans ridiculous at home and abroad. "Anglomania" is a disease which never attacks a healthy mind, or one which would under any conditions be fit for any good purpose. Bad as is this extreme it is hardly worse than the opposite extreme of Philistinism, which proclaims an implacable warfare against everything foreign, and pretends to believe that nothing good can grow anywhere but under the shadow of the stars and stripes.

Of all countries outside of his own England is that which offers most attractions to the average citizen of the United States. Comparatively few people in this busy, struggling country ever have an opportunity to gratify this creditable desire to visit England. A very small per centage of those who do visit it are so fortunate as to see any considerable portion of the country from the top of a coach in the full spring tide, surrounded by a select company of bright friends, and under auspices which insure an association with the best of Englishmen, as well as a view of the best of England. These conditions are so rarely enjoyed that one who has had their privileges does good service to others in giving a graphic account of his enviable experience.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of Pittsburg, some years ago wrote an interesting book on coaching through England. Mr. Carnegie and his coach appear again in a delightful volume, which has just been published by Charles Scribner's Sons, entitled "The Chronicle of the Coach," by John Denison Champlin, jr., with numerous illustrations by Edward L. Chichester.

This time Mr. Carnegie figures not as the chronicler, but as "Mæcenas," who took a party of friends on his coach from Charing Cross, London, to Ilfracombe, on the southwestern coast of England. The journey occupied fourteen days, and furnished Mr. Champlin with the material for one of the breeziest and most entertaining books of travel that it has been my good fortune to read. The route lay through one of the most beautiful sections of the island and at every stage revealed a wealth of historical romance. A great deal of information is interwoven with the thread of the narrative, but never so as to tinge it with the coloring of the guide book, or to interrupt the refreshing recital of daily incidents.

THE START.

After a lunch at the Grand hotel on Whit Monday, 1884, the start is made from Charing Cross. According to the author it was the proper place to start from. He says:

"Charing Cross is the centre of the world. London—despite the claim of the American Athens—is the great terrestrial nerve-nucleus from which radiate to every part of the globe influences affecting directly or indirectly, men of every speech and clime."

As the coach, drawn by four splendid blacks and bays, and driven by "Jackson," a veteran manipulator of the ribbons, rolls through the London thoroughfares, it passes, among many other noticeable objects, some specimens of patriotic statuary, which prove that we in the United States are not the only people who suffer on this score. They see the statue of Nelson standing on its tail, slim shaft and suggesting Taine's comparison of it to "a rat on a pole." Then comes the dismal effigy of "The Iron Duke" which a Frenchman who still grieved over Waterloo once looked upon and triumphantly exclaimed, "At last France is avenged!"

At Cobham the party stops at the home of a seer "who is known wherever English is spoken." The "seer" is soon recognized as Mr. Matthew Arnold and when the coach leaves his house it carries him along with its merry party. From Cobham there is a fine drive to Guildford, a quaint old town "with one business street." The thirty-seven miles from Guildford to Winchester are conveyed in a day. On every side are historical scenes, ducal estates, palaces of princes, homes of poets, snug cottages and lovely meadows. Winchester is in many respects the most interesting city in England. From Cerdic down it was the favorite capital of the Saxon monarchs and the center of Saxon aristocracy. The conquering Norman preferred London and the ancient glory of Wincester departed, but not without leaving many interesting memorials.

After looking at the tombs of King Canute, King Rufus, King Edmund and some lesser extinct lights of nobility, the guide asks languidly if the visitors would like to see the grave of Izaak Walton. They paid more reverent homage to the gentle old philosopher than to the departed kings. The author exclaims with enthusiasm:

"Izaak Walton! Did I forget that the prince of anglers and the king of good fellows was buried in Winchester church? If I had neglected to do homage at this tomb I should never have forgiven myself."

The old Winchester cathedral is visited at sundown and well described.

"Our visit at that hour was well worth paying for. The golden slanting rays of the setting sun lent a dim, religious light to the interior, which rendered it far more solemn than it could possibly be under the glare of day. The great clustered columns of Purbeck marble were in deep shadow on one side, while on the other their polished surfaces and the beautiful triforium above them were flooded with the mellow beams from the lancet windows of the celestory."

Among the most pleasing incidents of the trip are the evenings spent at cosy wayside inns, and the strolls in the long silvery twilights over the blooming landscapes. One day an English M. P., who has joined the party, guides them to a trout stream and furnishes some fine sport.

all tourists find much to interest and to mystify them. This party, like almost all those who now visit the place, call to mind the time when Carlyle and Emerson together walked over that bare heather beside the tumbled stones of the Druid temple "and there sat down and talked of the immortality of the soul." The present author does not succumb to such solemn suggestions, but his comments are lively and instructive. He says:

"That Stonehenge is disappointing at first sight is the verdict of every traveler. When viewed from a distance the stones are dwarfed by the vastness of the plain and by the absence of any standard of comparison. They lie absolutely alone in a waste of green sward, not a tree, not a shrub, not even a fence near them to aid the eye in estimating their height or size. Not until you come under their very shadow and see how the great monoliths tower above your head do you become awed by the simple grandeur of the structure—a grandeur equaled by few other temples raised by human hands. How much more impressive than is the noblest gothic pile to the man of civilization must this Westminster Abbey of its time have appeared ... half barbarous people who witnessed in it ceremonies of a mysterious cult, who saw: the sacrificial altar fed with living men.'"

'The desert visible by dismal flames, * * * *

Again:

"Nineveh has yielded up her secrets, and we know probably as much of the pyramids as to be revealed; but who has unravelled the mystery of Stonehenge? It is to this day undecided whether it be pre Roman or post-Roman, a temple or a tomb."

As they bowled over the smooth road from Stonehenge to Sherbonne, one of the gentlemen takes a lesson in driving, which "Jackson" is proud to give. After annoucing the fundamental rules of English coaching, Jackson remarks:

"They say Hammericans always drives to the right," and on being informed that such is their habit, he meditatively ejaculates:

"Queer people!" which amuses the republican tourists no little. They have the good fortune to hear the English lark at its best.

THE ENGLISH LARK.

"There's a lark."

"A flood of melody came down from the clouds. We could just see the five songsters soaring in the sunlight above us, looking so small, such mere specks against the sky that we could but wonder how their song could reach us at all. But every note was clear and distinct, reaching our ears even after the tiny specks had faded away in the azure vault. After hearing five larks at once, it is easier to appreciate Izaak Walton's feelings when he heard the nightingales sing as he sat angling. 'Lord,' said he, 'what music hast thou provided for the saints in Heaven, when thou affordest bad men such music on earth.'"

But the author is true to his distant friends in the groves of America and thus attests his fidelity:

"And having thus expressed his opinion in regard to these noble British songsters, he feels moved to go a step further and to say that he knows of a bird which neither the Angler nor the Bard of Avon ever listened to, a bird of his 'ain countree'—the American mocking bird—whose song is in every respect preferable to that of either lark or nightingale. It is sweeter, richer, mellower, more varied and more brilliant, of greater compass, more powerful and more prolonged than that of any songster in the British woods."

Between Exeter, the birthplace of Coleridge, and Okehampton, there is some strikingly wild country.

"One of the American ladies expressed surprise at finding such wild scenery in England, which, she said, she had been taught to regard as a thoroughly cultivated country where nature's ruggedness had long since been so modified by art as to be unrecognizable to her true worshippers. This disingenious remark brought a smile to the faces of the Britons, and the M. P. expressed a wish that she might see some of the rugged scenery of the north country where Dame Nature still lives amid as wild surrounding as did Mother Eve in her original garden."

All along the route are seen types of English character, some of them quaintly interesting.

Bideford is described in the beautiful words of Charles Kingsley:

"Pleasantly the old town stands there beneath its soft Italian sky, fanned day and night by the fresh ocean breeze, which forbids alike the keen winter frosts and the fierce thunder heats of the midland; and pleasantly it has stood there for now, perhaps, eight hundred years since the first Grenvil, cousin of the conqueror, returning from the conquest of South Wales, drew around him trusty Saxon serfs, and free Norse rovers with their golden curls, and dark silurian Britons from the Swansea shore, and all the mingled blood which still gives to the seaward folk of the next country their strength and intellect and, even in these levelling days, their peculiar beauty of face and form."

From Bideford the drive is to Chovelly and thence to Ilfracombe, whose illimitable waste of waters terminates this delightful journey. The party had spent just fourteen days on the coach, which they agreed were among the happiest of their lives. "Antiquo," one of their number, who was always seeking historical illustrations, remarked that they had spent in this brief time as many happy days as Abder Rahman III. had in all his life.

"And who was he?"

"Abder Rahman III," as a half pitying smile spread over his countenance, "was the great Moorish king of Cordova. When he drew near his end, he said one day during a conversation with that good man, Sulieman Ben Abdelgafir El Firexi: 'When I sum up the moments of pure and perfect tranquility of mind accorded to me during my reign of fifty years, I can not make them amount to more than fourteen days of true happiness.'"

Despite Antiquo's queer old-fashioned notions about the unities of time and place, it was conceded by all the rest that Abder-Rahman must have spent those days on a coach.

One of the last incidents of this excursion so crowded with pleasures of various kinds, was the recitation by a young Englishman of Uncle Remus's "Tar Baby" story, which won the applause of the entire party.

The entire book is interesting and instructive, and in portraying the merry hours spent by a party of American ladies and gentlemen, with some English friends, on a coach trip through England, it has supplied to the public a pleasant and entertaining volume which will surely be widely read.

Our Rapid Transitory Existence.

Brief as it is at the longest, is liable to be materially curtailed by our own indiscretions. The dyspeptic eat what they should not, the bilious drink coffee in excess, and the rheumatic, neuralgic and consumptive sit in draughts, get wet feet and remain in damp clothes, and then wonder when ill how they became so. To persons with a tendency to neuralgia, we recommend a daily use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and always a wineglassful after unavoidable exposure in damp or otherwise inclement weather. Efficient protection is afforded by this pleasant safeguard, which diffuses a genial glow through the system, invigorates and tones it, and promotes nerve tranquility. Fever and ague, biliousness, constipation, dyspepsia and renal disorder, are among the maladies which it remedies and prevents.

Indian Resentment

From the Washington, Ga., Chronicle.

Madison has an Indian named Bill Waters, who showed indignant resentment in a very marked degree at a fire in Madison in 1869. He had brought five bales of cotton out of a cellar by his own unaided strength and put it down at a safe distance from the fire. When he was carrying the sixth, one of the owners called to him with the question: "What do you mean, trying to steal that cotton?" This was more than his Indian nature could bear. He carried the bale back and put it down where the fire could reach it, and as rapidly as possible carried them all back and threw them into the flames.

Bill Waters is probably the only one of the Cherokee Indians now living in middle Georgia. His mother moved away with the balance of her tribe about the year 1833 and left Bill who was then eight years old, with his father, who was only three-quarters Indian. Bill married a negro woman and he associates altogether with that race. He has the usual thriftless Indian habit of spending everything that he makes.

A leading member of the Legal Profession of New York City, CHARLES CARROL LEEDS, 120 Broadway, says: "Liebig Co.'s Coca Beef Tonic strengthened my wife as no other tonic has ever done, and it is, besides, very agreeable to take." It will reconstruct the most shattered and enfeebled, reinvigorate the aged and infirm, and make sickly children and infants blooming and healthy.

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

Bridge Building and Iron Working Grounds, Plant, etc., to be Sold at Public Outcry.

IN PURSUANCE OF THE TERMS OF, AND UNDER the powers conferred by, a certain trust deed, or mortgage, executed on January 23d last, by the Atlanta Bridge and Iron Works to L. J. Hill and R. H. Richards, as trustees for certain bondholders therein named, the undersigned, L. J. Hill, trustee as aforesaid (the said R. H. Richards declining to act further in said matter), will sell upon the premises, at public outcry, on Thursday, the 25th day of November next, at 11 o'clock a.m., to the highest bidder for cash, if not before sold at private sale upon satisfactory terms being offered, the following described property, viz:

All that tract or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the city of Atlanta, which was deeded to E. M. Cravath and E. P. Smith by Wm. Jennings, trustee, and Francis M. Jennings, on the 19th day March, 1866, such deed being recorded in the clerk's office of Fulton superior court in book "H," page 708, and the said land being therein more fully described thus: "All that tract or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Fulton, and state of Georgia, near the northeast limits of the city of Atlanta on the Marietta road, and bounded on the north by W. O. Moore, on the east by Peters and Brewer, and on the south by Griffith, now J. J. Morrison, and on the west by the right-of-way of the Western and Atlantic railroad, the same containing six acres, more or less, being the premises formerly owned and improved by George W. D. Cook, and conveyed by him to Adam Jones, and by Jones to James O. Harris, and by James O. Harris to grantors;" being the premises whereon are situated the Bridge building works and apparatus of the late firm of Wilkins, Post & Co., together with all and singular the buildings, fixtures and other rights, members and appurtenances thereto in any wise appertaining or belonging; and also the tools for use in the bridge-building and iron-working business situate on the above described premises, including machinery and other appliances; and also rolling mill machinery, including a one hundred-horse power engine, and nine-inch train, with housings, bed plates and brasses complete, also located upon the above described premises; and also the stock on hand and located on said premises, including bolts, bar iron nuts, washers, plate and scrap.

The foregoing will be sold as the property of the Atlanta Bridge and Iron Works, in accordance with the provisions of the trust deed above referred to, which is recorded in the clerk's office of Fulton Superior Court, in book "O" of Mortgages, pages 622, 623 and 624, and to this record particular reference is hereby made.

Said trust deed was made to secure the payment of thirty thousand dollars, represented by sixty bonds of five hundred dollars each, with interest thereon at eight per cent per annum, represented by certain coupons attached to said bonds, which coupons were to become due and payable on the first day of each succeeding July and January, beginning July 1st last and ending with the maturity of said bonds, viz.: January 1, 1896. And in said deed it is provided that should the Atlanta Bridge and Iron Works fail to pay said bonds or any of the coupons at maturity, it hereby constitutes the said L. J. Hill and R. H. Richards trustees, as aforesaid, or their successors, its agents to sell said property at public or private sale, as they may deem will command the highest price, and to execute titles thereto in the name of said The Atlanta Bridge and Iron Works, after having advertised the same for ninety (90) days in one of the daily newspapers of the city of Atlanta, and apply the proceeds from sale to the expenses incident thereto, and to the payment of said bonds and coupons, and if there be a balance remaining, the same to be paid to it and its successors.

On July 1st last the coupons attached to each of said bonds, representing the interest then accrued thereon, became due and payable, but the same were not then paid, nor have they since been paid; and this sale is made for the purpose of carrying out the objects in said deed expressed.

Terms of sale, cash. L. J. HILL, Trustee.

CLOVER

CONDENSED MILK

PURE, FRESH, UNSKIMMED.

Pure water is in reality one of the most important requisites of good milk. The country around Northville is peculiarly well adapted to dairying. The land is hilly and very fertile, and contains the very finest clover pastures of our State. Cold springs come to the surface all over, no farm being without them. This gives abundant water at all times accessible to the cows. To secure the very best of milk, Pure, Fresh and Sweet, we located our works directly at source of production, thereby avoiding all danger of

TAINTED MILK.

Many brands of condensed milk are made of milk hawked around cities from house to house, and what cannot be sold is afterwards condensed and thrown on the market. There is nothing manufactured that is so quickly tainted, and requires so much care and cleanliness, as milk. We therefore located our works in the center of a large farm of 160 acres, free from foul odors, gases and germs. The milk is received and evaporated within four hours from the time it is drawn from the cows. A large spring on one side of our works pours forth 600 gallons of pure and cold spring water every minute, giving us an abundance of water to cleanse with.

MOTHERS AND NURSES:

Would you prepare food for yourselves or children in Copper Pans? Ask your Physician if it is advisable to do so. Do you know that the oldest and best established brands of condensed milk are made in Copper Pans? We are the first and only manufacturers to use Porcelain Pans.

SKIMMED MILK.

Why use skimmed condensed milk? You can easily for yourself determine whether condensed milk has been skimmed or not. Take one tablespoonful of condensed milk and ten tablespoonsful of water, thoroughly dissolve by stirring, let it stand in a cup, (or, better still, in a tumbler) for 4 or 5 hours. If the cream is there it will show itself on top. Test our CLOVER with any other brand. Remember, the value of milk is in the amount of cream it contains.

SCROFULA

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

Humors,

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Erysipelas,

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

Canker, and

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Catarrh,

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

CHANG AND ENG.

THE SIAMESE TWINS AND THEIR HISTORY.

How They Came to This Country—Their North Carolina Home and Their Wives—Chang Annoys His Brother by Getting Drunk—The Sad Death of the Twins, Etc.

From the Philadelphia News.

Chang and Eng Bunker were born near Bangkok, Siam, in 1811, their father being a Chinaman and their mother a native of Siam. Their mother bore seventeen children, never giving birth to less than two. The twins were united at the fronts of their chests by a prolongation of a kind of fleshy band the size of the hand. This band of flesh was about two inches broad and four inches thick. This ligament was tough and capable of being considerable extended. One could whisper in the ear of one without the other hearing, while volatile salts applied to the nostrils of one had no effect on the other. Pinching the arm of one excited no sensation in the other, still if you but stuck a pin in the exact vertical center of the connecting link both would flinch from the hurt. The twins were seldom observed to converse with each other. They played a good game of draughts, made pretty much the same moves, and at the same time and frequently played against each other.

During the greater portion of their lives they supported themselves by making exhibitions of their curious bond of union, and in this way amassed quite a tidy fortune. They excited the curiosity of medical men in all parts of the world, and created frequent animated discussions in learned circles by consulting eminent surgeons in Europe and America as to the safety of an operation whereby they might be separated. Dr. William H. Pancoast, of this city, who was instrumental in bringing their dead bodies to this city, thinks that these consultations were mainly used to excite the curiosity of the public, adding, "as it is believed by those who knew them well that they never, except once, seriously contemplated such an operation. Upon this one occasion, after a violent disagreement, they consulted their physician, Dr. Hollingsworth, Sr., of Mount Airy, North Carolina, but when he stated to them his belief of the uncertainty and danger of the operation, reminding them of the opinions they had received from many distinguished medical men, they relinquished the idea entirely. This event occurred not many months prior to their death."

From another source, however, I learn that a few years prior to their death they corresponded with some of the leading surgeons in London as to the possibility of the ligament being cut, so that in case of the death of one the other might be saved. At the request of a London surgeon they visited that city, and many experiments were tried to determine the safety of such an operation. Among other things a ligature was tied firmly for a few minutes around the connecting band, so as to prevent the circulation of blood through the arteries. But it seemed as if each would expire if this were persisted in. The smaller of the two fainted away and lost all consciousness, and similar symptoms demonstrated themselves in the other, but the process could not be continued longer without endangering the life of him who was the first to faint.

The twins first visited the United States in 1829. After traveling through this country and Europe, they, in 1843, bought a plantation at a small town called Trap-Hole, in Wilkes county, North Carolina, about forty miles from where they died. Here, in the same year, they married two sisters named Yates, who were native North Carolinians, and, although uneducated women, were, nevertheless, possessed of very good intellects. The wives were both very strong and healthy women. Afterward they took up their abode in Mount Airy, North Carolina, and subsequently purchased a second plantation about two miles from the first and erected a dwelling upon it, to which Eng removed his family, Chang's family remaining at the old homestead. It was their custom, and the plan was never departed from, of spending three days at each house. Cold weather or warm, rain or shine, nothing whatever was permitted to interfere with this arrangement. Upon one occasion a child of the brother at whose house they were stopping died upon the last day of their visit to the dwelling, but the following day being the appointed time for their change of base the two brothers left the scene of death and stuck to their usual programme. In fact, their rigid adherence to this rule was eventually, as I will shortly show you, the cause of their death.

They raised large families of robust children in North Carolina, Chang having three boys and seven girls, and Eng seven boys and five girls. The wives lived apart from the time that Mrs. Eng Bunker bore a sixth child, when Mrs. Chang Bunker was mother of but five. Notwithstanding these peculiar conditions they raised respectable families, were members of the Baptist church and were held in high esteem by their neighbors. They were expert in the handling of tools, in plowing, shingling, shooting, driving, rowing and similar occupations. When Stoneman's cavalry command came through Surry county, North Carolina, and called for recruits, a draft was made. Into the fateful wheel went the names of Chang and Eng. But one name, that of Eng, was drawn. The gallant commander was nonplussed. Eng must go, but Chang would not. Stoneman dared not take both. So he resigned his claim to Eng.

On Monday evening, January 12, 1874—the twins then being in their sixty-third year—Chang, who had, despite his brother's protests, become addicted to immoderate drinking, was seized, while in his own house, with an attack of bronchitis. On Wednesday the attack had somewhat subsided. Thursday evening was the appointed time for a removal to Eng's dwelling. The day was cold and Chang was complaining, but their programme was still adhered to. The road leading from the two houses was very rough and frozen. Early in the evening they started upon their journey in an open wagon, or carryall, and in a short time arrived at Eng's residence. Chang became chilled by the exposure, and complained of being very cold, while his brother was in apparent good health and grumbled because he had to sit by the fire. They retired that night, and in answer to an inquiry from the sick man's wife on Friday, he stated that he was much better. On Friday evening they retired to a small room by themselves and went to bed, but Chang was very restless. Some time between midnight and daybreak they got up and sat by the fire. Again Eng protested and said he wished to lie down, as he was sleepy. Chang stoutly refused and replied that it hurt his breast to recline. After awhile they retired to their bed, and Eng fell into a deep sleep.

About 4 o'clock one of Eng's sons came into the room, and going to the bedside discovered that his uncle was dead. Eng was awakened by the noise, and in the greatest alarm turned and looked at the lifeless form beside him. He exclaimed, "Then, I am going!" and was at once seized with violent nervous paroxysms. No physicians were at hand, and, it being three miles to the town of Mount Airy, some time necessarily elapsed before one could be summoned. A messenger was dispatched to the village for Dr. Hollingsworth, and he sent his brother, also a physician, at once to the plantation.

After the announcement of Chang's death Eng made no further mention of him except to request that the dead body be moved closer to him. Soon he complained of a choking sensation and asked to be raised in bed. He continued rational. His last words were: "May God have mercy on my soul." He gradually became fainter, fell into a state of syncope and before the arrival of the physician died quietly a little over two hours from the announcement to him of the death of his brother.

The news spread like wildfire, but the village being forty miles from Greensboro, the nearest railroad and telegraph office, of course did not reach the public of the outside world until Monday. Dr. Hollingsworth made an examination of the bodies and found, as physicians had long known, that the ligament which connected the twins were an extension of the breast bones. The two bodies had but one navel, which was in the center of the bond of union, and there were two umbilical cords branching from this, one extending into each body. The autopsy of the bodies was begun in the house of Eng, Sunday, February 1, 1874, and finished in the Mutter Museum of the College of Physicians in this city.

Dr. Pancoast, one year latter, reported on the surgical considerations in regard to the propriety of an operation deduced from the autopsy, and he reached these conclusions:

1. That as necessary deduction from the anatomical demonstration of its constituent parts, no operation of section of the band, for the purpose of separating the twins in adult life, could have been performed and their lives preserved.
2. That it would have been judicious surgery, upon the death of Chang, to have at once applied a strong ligature around the band as far as possible from the body of Eng, and then to have cut through the band between the ligature and the body of Chang.
3. That whether or not the operation would have been successful in the childhood of the twins is problematical; but that it would have been the part of wisdom and humanity to have made the effort.

As a matter of fact, Eng died of fright or shock, and gave the doctors no opportunity to try the suggestion contained in Dr. Pancoast's second conclusion.

WHAT A DOCTOR RELATED.

STRICKEN WITH BLINDNESS AT FOUR YEARS OF AGE.

Pink-Eye and Epizootic—An Abrupt Change of Subject—The Boy in Knickerbockers and What Dr. Francoise Told About Him.

From Kalamazoo, Mich., Telegraph, October 15, 1886.

"No, pink-eye and the epizootic are not one and the same," said Dr. Francoise, the well-known veterinary surgeon of 583 East Main street, this city, to a Telegraph reporter yesterday. "They are widely different. The disease which has been so prevalent in this vicinity and which laid up so many of the street car company's horses recently is the epizootic, a much less serious malady than the pink-eye."

THE DOCTOR CHANGES THE SUBJECT ABRUPTLY.

"By the way," continued the doctor after discussing the treatment for pink eye and epizootic and various proprietary and other remedies for equine complaints, "you are advertising in your paper the best proprietary medicine I know of, the best remedy on this continent. It isn't a remedy that I use at all in my business, and I have no desire to have my name hawked about appended to a stereotyped testimonial to a patent medicine, but I know of two cases in which the S. S. S. remedy which you are advertising has saved a great amount of terrible suffering and expense, and one of these two cases was my own.

"Four years ago last spring, little Willie, the four-year-old son of Mr. Peter DeWitt, a relative of mine, residing at that time in Milwaukee, was taken with the measles. The disease struck in on him and the poor Distinguished physicians in Milwaukee and Chicago were consulted, and said that nothing could be done for him, and that blinded thus early he would continue sightless during his entire life. While at Hot Springs Mr. DeWitt had heard the S. S. S. remedy, manufactured at Atlanta, spoken of very highly. How it happened I don't know, for S. S. S. is not guaranteed to cure blindness, but by some happy chance it was decided to test its efficacy in Willie's case. By the time he had taken a bottle and a half his eyes had so far recovered that he could play out of doors. After taking four bottles he was completely cured. His eyes seemed perfectly sound, and have continued so ever since."

LITTLE FELLOW WAS LEFT BLIND.

"Were you blind, too, doctor?" asked the reporter.

"No, mine was a different case. In the spring of 1883, while handling some carbolic acid which I was about to use for some purpose in the practice of my profession, I accidentally spilled some of it on my left leg, between the ankle and the knee. Well, sir, I didn't think of its being any very severe injury at the time, although it made quite a painful wound, but I had a terrible time with that leg. On the place where it was burned with the acid there came a running sore which never left me for three years and which might be there yet if I hadn't used S. S. S. It discharged a serum-like matter, and was very painful at times. It was a great inconvenience to me in my business, for a man to be a successful veterinary surgeon must be both active and muscular. Well, it was queer, but I couldn't find anything that would cure that sore. I submitted to the treatment of a number of physicians in turn, and tried various remedies, both standard and empirical, in which I had considerable confidence. But I got no better. Of course I had heard of what S. S. S. had done for Willie, and after suffering great pain and pecuniary loss for three years, I concluded to try it myself. I tell you I was rather discouraged, but last spring I began taking S. S. S. and felt better right off. After using six bottles, averaging a bottle every seven or eight days, I was cured up. That leg was all right, and it has never bothered me a bit since. I am

KIND OF MASHED ON THAT MEDICINE,

but I have good reason to be. I can't say too much for it, and although there is, of course, a limit to its possibilities, still I'd almost believe it would cure anything. I have heard a great deal of what it has done, but you see these two instances of which I have told you were cures of which I had personal and positive knowledge.

"Here, Willie, Willie, come here!" shouted the doctor suddenly to an active little boy dressed in knickerbockers, who was playing in the street. "This is Willie DeWitt. His father used to be a railroad conductor, but he is out west now on business, and Willie is staying with us until he gets back. He goes to the East avenue school every day, and never has the least trouble with his eyesight. See, his eyes look as well as yours or mine."

Willie, an eight year-old little man in a straw hat, came up rather bashfully, as boys will before strangers. His eyes certainly looked bright and well enough, and his eyesight must be excellent, too, for presently, when a playmate beckoned to him from some distance up the street, he saw him plain enough and ran away at the top of his speed.

GEORGIA COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

A Call for a General State Convention to be Held in Atlanta.

ATLANTA, Ga., October 23, 1886.—To the Commercial Travelers of Georgia: At a meeting of the Georgia division of the Travelers' Protective association, held on the 16th instant, at the chamber of commerce, Atlanta, the undersigned were appointed a committee to draft an address with a view to making known to you the purpose of our organization and its progress, and to arrange for a state convention at an early date.

The objects of the organization are:

1. To secure the repeal of all municipal, county, state or territorial laws imposing and enforcing a license tax on commercial travelers.
2. To secure recognition from railroads as a profession, and obtain as favorable terms on transportation and baggage as are given to any other class of travelers, and to adjust all differences between railroads and commercial travelers on a fair, equitable business basis.
3. To secure hotel accommodations commensurate with the prices paid, and to adjust complaints against hotels or by them against commercial travelers.
4. To elevate the social and moral character of commercial travelers as a profession, to bring about the better acquaintance of members, and to provide pleasant social amusement and entertainment to our members on the road.

In the northern and western and northwestern states where the national association has attained age and strength the organization has met with signal success in securing concessions from railroads and otherwise.

We are assured that upon the attainment of greater numerical strength and the display of deeper interest on our part we can acquire in the southern states such concessions as are reasonable and just.

We invite you to join us and feel assured that in an united effort success is within our reach.

We believe it to be the duty of every commercial traveler in Georgia to join the Traveler's Protective Association, because it is in the interest of the houses they represent to do so.

With a view to promoting our cause, a state convention, under the auspices of our state division will be held in Atlanta on December 16th next at 10 o'clock a. m., which every commercial traveler in Georgia is earnestly requested to attend.

This committee will endeavor to secure reduced rates from the railroad companies and ample accommodations at our hotels at reduced prices. We promise on the part of the Atlanta resident members of our association and our merchants and manufacturers, cordial hospitality. [Signed.] Joe Hirsch, president.

A STRANGE CRIMINAL.

THE REMARKABLE STORY OF LIFE PRISONER.

Gone Crazy on Religion—His Strange Freaks in Confinement—Efforts to Escape—The Story of His Crimes—The Prisoner's Religious Oracle—A Most Terrible Scene—Etc.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., October 23—[Special.]—In the prison of slope No. 2 of the Pratt mines is to be seen a tall, healthy-looking white man, of about fifty eight years, whose long white hair and deep cavernous eyes and hard features attracts the attention of the visitor. His bunk is covered with books and stationery, and in the corner near it is a stand on which is a large Bible well worn by constant use. The man, when approached, beckons you to him, and stopping suddenly, places his hand across his forehead, and as if seeming to grasp a thought, says: "God has ordered you to come unto me and ye have come."

He holds out his bony hand and tenderly grasps yours and says: "Come sinner to me and be saved, for I am the way and the life." He reaches for his Bible, selects a chapter and reads in clear and distinct articulation the words of God, and closing his book suddenly, begins to deliver a lecture on what he has read, and tells you what good he had done you. He tells you he has read the Bible no less than eighteen times from cover to cover, can repeat it by heart, and that he is inspired by its teachings to do good to his fellow man.

But who is this character?

You raise your eyes and on a card enclosed in a glass frame before the bunk is printed on a white card,

JOHN WESLEY DUBOSE, LIFE.

He is one of the most remarkable criminals in southern prisons, whose life has been a career of crime followed by a trail of blood almost from his infancy; who is now serving a life sentence for murder. The daring deeds and thrilling escapes from justice by this strange man would fill a volume.

Nine years ago he murdered a citizen named Aldrich, in Shelby county, and fled to the woods, where he lived in the swamps, where he evaded the officers of the law until he became bold to recklessness. His camp was in a dense post-oak thicket, flat, and in places almost impenetrable, and man could hide himself in it for years and no one could find him. DuBose cut through the undergrowth, and on an island surrounded by water on nearly all sides, erected himself and wife a hut of such trees and drift-wood as he could secure. The game in the swamp was plentiful, and he lived on it several days. He suffered much from exposure and cold, and his hair grew almost gray. But for his splendid physique, he could never have undergone what he did.

The couple could stand the hardships no longer, and left for Montevallo. He appeared as a common farmer, but was detected in spite of his assumed innocence. It was whispered around that he was in town, and the quiet village was thrilled with excitement. Brave citizens armed themselves with determination to capture him. He was trading in the store of Mr. Clay Reynolds, and was in the rear room when Mr. Edward Vest walked in with a shot gun and ordered his surrender. He laughed and dashed through a window, as Vest fired wide of the mark.

A THRILLING SCENE.

When DuBose escaped he dashed out of the back yard of the store closely followed by his wife, who screamed as she ran. Half a dozen men with pistols and guns led by Messrs. E. Vest and John Garner ran him through an old field firing as they went. Both Dubose and his wife fell and the crowd drew up to find it a ruse. He was placed in jail but aided by his faithful wife made his escape. He was recaptured and escaped no less than five times from the jail, which was regarded secure. He was removed to the Chilton jail, from which he escaped twice, and was regarded by the people as a man inspired by God. The country was in a state of terror and did not know what course to pursue. He was finally captured by an armed band, was tried by a jury composed of good citizens, and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. He was sent to the Pratt mines to work out his sentence. In January, 1884, he made a daring and successful escape from the Pratt mines. A party was organized and started to capture the noted desperado, consisting of the officers of the Pratt mines prison, the sheriff of Clinton and the famous E O. Cranswell with his pack of bloodhounds. The party went to the former home of DuBose, twenty-eight miles from Clinton, on the Coosa river, where his wife lived and had assisted in his escape. The house was found deserted, but evidences indicated that they had been there. The bloodhounds were made to circle around the premises and it was discovered the pair had escaped five hours before. DuBose and his wife were run by the dogs until night, when they were called in. The next morning his trail was followed to Clanton and struck sixteen hours old which was followed three miles when their fierce brey told the fugitives had been found. He and his wife were asleep on a bed of pine straw, and were awakened by the bark of the dogs. DuBose left his wife and ran one hundred yards and got behind a tree and began to fire as the dogs gathered around him. He killed one of the hounds, and as the others of the pack caught the sight of blood they became frenzied and made a dash for him, when Cranswell rode up and by a signal called them off. DuBose swore he would never be taken alive, and fired at the men, who fired back, and in the exchange of shots his arm was broken.

DU BOSE'S DEFIANCE.

When the prisoner was handcuffed he turned to the crowd with curled lips and a sneer, and said:

"Well, boys, you have got me this time; but I'll make a break again."

He next escaped from the mines in May, 1884, when he did not go, for he discovered the dogs were after him by their yells, made a circle of two miles and returned to the prison, and as he gave himself up to the guard, said:

"There is no use trying to get away from those bloodhounds. I have come back home."

DuBose was taken with a peculiar mania for Bible study, and beseeched the prison management to allow him to have a Bible in his bunk, which was allowed him, with paper, pen and ink. He wrote poetry and prose from the Bible, and would fill page after page of foolscap paper with his writings. He would preach to the convicts, and has for a long time been the Bible oracle of the place. He preaches and teaches, and imagines himself the son of God. He conceived the idea in February, 1885, that he must fast forty days and nights, and refused to eat, but was prevented from doing so by the prison authorities. He determined to do so or make his escape, which caused him to be more carefully watched by the guards. He waited his opportunity, and one day at 3 o'clock in the afternoon passed the mining boss in the slope with a crowd of convicts who were behind in their task and asked him if he had any objection to his unloading an extra car. Permission was granted him, and at supper he turned up missing when the count was made. It was thought he was trying to escape through the mine to the old entry, and several miners were detailed to look for him, which search proved fruitless and was given up. The next day the entire mine was searched with experienced miners with lanterns and lights without finding him, and a reward of ten dollars was offered for his body, dead or alive, as he was believed to be in the mine somewhere. For several days two men watched every inch of room they could walk over and were about to give up when one of them spied a light in the farthest end of an abandoned section and went towards it when suddenly it was blown out. It was decided it was a light made by DuBose but no one would approach it for fear of being killed. The light was seen again but the authorities concluded he would need food and come out.

FOURTEEN DAYS WITHOUT FOOD.

For fourteen days DuBose remained in his place of seclusion without food or water, and did not budge until the fifteenth day, when he heard the men running the pump in the slope and he made a noise. The men stopped work and abandoned the pumps, thinking it was a ghost they saw. One strong miner, braver than his companions, caught him and carried him to the top. He was a strange looking sight and had changed almost beyond recognition; his hair had grown whiter; his frame was bent, and what was once a well developed physical man was a partial wreck. He acted strangely and would not eat or drink, and for several days was unfit for work of any kind. He has never been the same person, and is not required on account of his physical condition to do hard work.

The place where he was concealed for so long was carefully examined and was a remarkable stronghold, on which he had worked for months. In the abandoned section is called Breddi's plank partition, consisting of boards placed in an upright position in such a manner as to divide or shut off the earth. He had made him a partition identical, which he placed against it leaving enough room for his body.

Where DuBose's wife is, is not known, but he swears that God has promised him to let him escape which he will do when he gets an opportunity. In the meantime, he is as gentle as a lamb and spends his time reading the Bible.

STRANGE PRESENTMENT

Of an Old Citizen of Poinsett County, Arkansas.

From the Little Rock, Ark., Gazette.

"Talk about presentment," said a prominent citizen to a reporter, "I know of a case coming under that head that strikes me as being the most remarkable on record, which occurred in Poinsett county in 1855, and was related by General T. C. Hindman, who was canvassing that part of the state at the time in the interest of his candidacy for congress. While in Poinsett county he stopped at a double log cabin one Sunday morning where he was welcomed by an old gray haired man who was surrounded by his wife and a dozen or more children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, of different sizes and age, who were accompanied by their parents. The general called at the house for dinner, and seeing such a large crowd assembled inquired the cause of the family reunion. One of the women replied by saying:

"'Dad's got it inter his head that he's goin' to die at 11 o'clock, and it now lacks nigh onto an hour of the time. He called us all over here to see him go off. He's over 60 years old and 'twont surprise any on us if what he says don't come true. He's lived in these parts over fifty year and they aint nobody 'round here as can say as he uver told a lie.'"

"About 10:30 o'clock," said General Hindman, "the old man ordered one of his sons to wheel an antiquated lounge in the hallway of the house, and without nay difficulty he stretched himself upon it. He appeared to be in perfect health, and although the eyes of most of the women assembled were red from crying, there was no visible cause for it, but the nearer the hour of 11 o'clock approached the louder and more general became the weeping."

"'My dear friends,' said General Hindman, in a sympathizing tone of voice, 'I don't think there is any occasion for all this sorrow. I think you are all borrowing trouble for yourselves. Just wait until 11 o'clock comes and I am sure you will find out that—'"

"'Look hyar, stranger,' exclaimed one of his sons, 'that old man that never told a lie in his life and we don't want you to dispute his word nuther or you'll answer for it.'"

"The general concluded that he would say nothing and watch the proceding, fully confident that in a few minutes the grief of the family would be turned into joy. In a few minutes the old man raised himself in a half sitting position and said:

"'Maria, fetch the old Bible in the front room that's got all your names in it and put it on this chair, and John, reach up on that top shelf in the cupboard and bring me that copy of the Gazette there.'"

"These requests were complied with and then the old man turned to Maria and addressing her said: 'Turn to the New Testament and read me Christ's sermon on the Mount.'"

"This was done, and then the aged man with a great deal of earnest feeling, spoke to John and said: 'John, open that paper and read me the democratic platform adopted at the national convention two years ago.'"

"John did as he was directed and when he had concluded reading the platform laid the paper on the chair. The old man then placed one hand on the Bible and the other on the copy of the Gazette, and looking in the face of each member of the family successively exclaimed:

"'My children, thar's the truth!'"

"He then laid down upon the lounge and without uttering another word breathed his last as the clock in an adjoining room was striking the hour of eleven."

FIGHTING FOR FLORIDA.

GENERAL GORDON DELIVERS A SPEECH AT OCALA.

Over Two Thousand Listen to the Eloquence of Georgia's Governor-Elect—The Democracy Take New Heart in Their Struggle—Other Political News of the Day.

OCALA, Fla., October 23—[Special.]—General John B. Gordon, governor elect of Georgia, at the invitation of a citizens committee, last night addressed a large concourse at the Marion opera house, in this city. He spoke for one hour and a half, and it was such a soul stirring speech as has not been heard in this state for years. The intensity of political feeling in the present congressional canvass is such that the effort of the heroic Gordon here last night had an effect almost electric. His speech more than any one event of the campaign will tend to encourage the democrats in their struggle against the enemy, and the next governor of Georgia has lent new life and fresh vigor to the democracy of Florida.

The opera house was filled to its utmost capacity, and fully two thousand people listened to and were inspired by his splendid address. Although laboring under the difficulties of indisposition and domestic affliction General Gordon nobly responded to the invitation of the committee, and came to the assistance of the party of good government in Florida. The people of the second Florida district acknowledge the additional obligation which this special favor has imposed, and give all honor to the hero of Appomattox, who, at a sacrifice, has given them the benefit of his splendid talents.

BOB TAYLOR'S SUCCESSOR.

Democrats of East Tennessee Do Not Like Wagoner's Appointment.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—Several weeks ago, at the request of leading democrats of East Tennessee, Major J. H. Wagoner was appointed United States pension agent at Knoxville to succeeded Robert Taylor, democratic nominee for governor. The new appointee was major of the 13th Tennessee cavalry union army, and was a gallant soldier. Immediately after his appointment democrats of East Tennessee came here and urged Secretary Lamar to recommend to the president a reconsideration of the case and a revocation of the appointment on the ground that as a member of the legislature in 1865, Wagoner voted to disfranchise ex-confederates, and also voted for a resolution to offer a reward for the apprehension of (ex governor, now senator) Isham G. Harris. Today Secretary Lamar made the following response to the persons who were demanding a reconsideration of the case:

The secretary of the interior declines to recommend a revocation of Major Wagoner's commission as pension agent at Knoxville, Tenn. He says Major Wagoner was appointed upon the recommendation of the leading and best citizens of Tennessee. All parties represented him as a man fully qualified in integrity, intellect and character for the duties of the position, and as a man endeared to the people by his consistent support, during the past twenty years, of their highest and best interests. The fact brought out against him since his commission was issued, that he had given an unjust and unwise vote for disfranchisement when he was a young man not more than twenty-five years of age, immediately after the war, when passions on both sides were raised to the highest pitch, should not now be used to ostracise him from a public trust among people to whose interests he has ever since been true and loyal. We have all been contending that the issues of the war and the passions growing out of it should not be kept alive, and I do not know of any instance in which precept can better be enforced by example than this. Both sides in Tennessee showed courage to fight and I am confident they have also that higher quality, magnanimity, mutually to forgive.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Among Them Lucius M. Lamar as Marshal of Southern District.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—The president has made the following appointments: Daniel G. Lockwood, New York, attorney of the United States northern district of New York; Lucius M. Lamar, Georgia, marshal United States southern district of Georgia. Consuls of the United States: Seth A. Pratt, Massachusetts, Zanzibar; C. R. McCall, Alabama, Santos; William R. Greathouse, Louisiana, Tampico; Enoch J. Smithers, Delaware, Tien Tsin; John T. Campbell, Colorado, Tamatana; Leopold Moore, New York, at Hull; Frank H. Goodyear, New York, Joseph W. Fellows, New Hampshire, Alfred Laudon Rives, Virginia, commission to examine forty miles of railroad constructed by the Northern Pacific railroad company in Washington territory.

The formal resignation of S. S. Cox, minister to Turkey, has been received at the department of state.

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The Will Attend the Ceremonies Next Thursday.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—Major General Schofield, who has charge of the ceremonies attending the inauguration of the Bartholdi statue next Thursday, called at the white house today and had an interview with the president in regard to his participation in the ceremonies. The president and most of the cabinet will attend, but the details of the trip have not been completed. It is expected that Mrs. Cleveland and the wives of several cabinet officers will accompany the party.

The secretary of the interior has informed the war department that thirty-nine Indian youths among the Apaches confined at Fort Marion, Fla., will be received for educational and industrial training if delivered to Superintendent Carlisle, Indian training school, Pennsylvania.

THE KNIGHTS' RECEPTION

Of their Delegates on Their Return from the Convention.

PHILADELPHIA, October 23.—The parade of the Knights of Labor tonight in honor of the delegates from this city to the Richmond convention, who returned this evening, was, without exception, the greatest demonstration of the kind ever seen here. Every local assembly of Knights of Labor in the city was represented, and it is estimated that 50,000 were in line, including workmen of almost every known trade and branch of employment. All the assemblies bore appropriate and significant transparencies. Thousands of people lined the sidewalk through which the procession passed, and Broad street, on which the procession formed, was almost impassible.

The Strike at an End.

LOUISVILLE, October 23.—The result of the conference between the strikers and Louisville and Nashville railroad officers was an amicable agreement, and the strikers will go back to work immediately, and freight has begun moving. The switchmen were given an advance of twenty-five cents per day. The brakeman's pay will be regulated by the trip and length of it. The rate per mile is not to exceed two cents. The company announces that the question of readjusting the pay of brakemen on the various branches of the road will be at once considered.

The Enfield Rifle Rejected.

LONDON, October 23.—The new Enfield rifle has been finally rejected by the armory authorities, because it is thought too complicated for service. [F]IGHTING FOR FLORIDA.

[G]ENERAL GORDON DELIVERS A SPEECH AT OCALA.

[Ov]er Two Thousand Listen to the Eloquence of Georgia's Governor-Elect—The Democracy Take New Heart in Their Struggle—Other Political News of the Day.

OCALA, Fla., October 23—[Special.]—General John B. Gordon, governor elect of Georgia, at the invitation of a citizens committee, last night addressed a large concourse at the Marion opera house, in this city. He spoke for one hour and a half, and it was such a soul stirring speech as has not been heard in this state for years. The intensity of political feeling in the present congressional canvass is such that the effort of the heroic Gordon here last night had an effect almost electric. His speech more than any one event of the campaign will tend to encourage the democrats in their struggle against the enemy, and the next governor of Georgia has lent new life and fresh vigor to the democracy of Florida.

The opera house was filled to its utmost capacity, and fully two thousand people listened to and were inspired by his splendid address. Although laboring under the difficulties of indisposition and domestic affliction General Gordon nobly responded to the invitation of the committee, and came to the assistance of the party of good government in Florida. The people of the second Florida district acknowledge the additional obligation which this special favor has imposed, and give all honor to the hero of Appomattox, who, at a sacrifice, has given them the benefit of his splendid talents.

BOB TAYLOR'S SUCCESSOR.

Democrats of East Tennessee Do Not Like Wagoner's Appointment.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—Several weeks ago, at the request of leading democrats of East Tennessee, Major J. H. Wagoner was appointed United States pension agent at Knoxville to succeeded Robert Taylor, democratic nominee for governor. The new appointee was major of the 13th Tennessee cavalry union army, and was a gallant soldier. Immediately after his appointment democrats of East Tennessee came here and urged Secretary Lamar to recommend to the president a reconsideration of the case and a revocation of the appointment on the ground that as a member of the legislature in 1865, Wagoner voted to disfranchise ex confederates, and also voted for a resolution to offer a reward for the apprehension of (ex governor, now senator) Isham G. Harris. Today Secretary Lamar made the following response to the persons who were demanding a reconsideration of the case:

The secretary of the interior declines to recommend a revocation of Major Wagoner's commission as pension agent at Knoxville, Tenn. He says Major Wagoner was appointed upon the recommendation of the leading and best citizens of Tennessee. All parties represented him as a man fully qualified in integrity, intellect and character for the duties of the position, and as a man endeared to the people by his consistent support, during the past twenty years, of their highest and best interests. The fact brought out against him since his commission was issued, that he had given an unjust and unwise vote for disfranchisement when he was a young man not more than twenty-one years of age, immediately after the war, when passions on both sides were raised to the highest pitch, should not now be used to ostracise him from a public trust among people to whose interests he has ever since been true and loyal. We have all been contending that the issues of the war and the passions growing out of it should not be kept alive, and I do not know of any instance in which precept can better be enforced by example than this. Both sides in Tennessee showed courage to fight and I am confident they have also that higher quality, magnanimity, mutually to forgive.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Among Them Lucius M. Lamar as Marshal of Southern District.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—The president has made the following appointments: Daniel A. Lockwood, New York, attorney of the United States northern district of New York; Lucius M. Lamar, Georgia, marshal United States southern district of Georgia. Consuls of the United States: Seth A. Pratt, Massachusetts, Zanzibar; C. R. McCall, Alabama, Santos; William R. Greathouse, Louisiana, Tampico; Enoch J. Smithers, Delaware, Tien Tsin; John T. Campbell, Colorado, Tamatana; Leopold Moore, New York, at Hull; Frank H. Goodyear, New York, Joseph W. Fellows, New Hampshire, Alfred Laudon Rives, Virginia, commission to examine forty miles of railroad constructed by the Northern Pacific railroad company in Washington territory.

The formal resignation of S. S. Cox, minister to Turkey, has been received at the department of state.

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

Who Will Attend the Ceremonies Next Thursday.

WASHINGTON, October 23.—Major General Schofield, who has charge of the ceremonies attending the inauguration of the Bartholdi statue next Thursday, called at the white house today and had an interview with the president in regard to his participation in the ceremonies. The president and most of the cabinet will attend, but the details of the trip have not been completed. It is expected that Mrs. Cleveland and the wives of several cabinet officers will accompany the party.

The secretary of the interior has informed the war department that thirty-nine Indian youths among the Apaches confined at Fort Marion, Fla., will be received for educational and industrial training if delivered to Superintendent Carlisle, Indian training school, Pennsylvania.

THE KNIGHTS' RECEPTION

[O]f their Delegates on Their Return from the Convention.

PHILADELPHIA, October 23.—The parade of the Knights of Labor tonight in honor of the delegates from this city to the Richmond convention, who returned this evening, was, without exception, the greatest demonstration of the kind ever seen here. Every local assembly of Knights of Labor in the city was represented, and it is estimated that 50,000 were in line, including workmen of almost every known trade and branch of employment. All the assemblies bore appropriate and significant transparencies. Thousands of people lined the sidewalk through which the procession passed, and Broad street, on which the procession formed, was almost impassible.

The Strike at an End.

LOUISVILLE, October 23.—The result of the conference between the strikers and Louisville and Nashville railroad officers was an amicable agreement, and the strikers will go back to work immediately, and freight has begun moving. The switchmen were given an advance of twenty-five cents per day. The brakeman's pay will be regulated by the trip and length of it. The rate per mile is not to exceed two cents. The company announces that the question of readjusting the pay of brakemen on the various branches of the road will be at once considered.

The Enfield Rifle Rejected.

LONDON, October 23.—The new Enfield rifle has been finally rejected by the armory authorities, because it is thought too complicated for service. It will be used, however, pending the selection of another weapon. From one thousand to fifteen hundred workmen must be discharged from the government factory at Enfield on account of this decision.

The Farmington Fire.

FARMINGTON, Me., October 23.—The great fire last night burned thirty-three dwelling houses, nineteen stores, three churches and two newspaper offices. The loss is estimated at $300,000; insurance small.

McCarthy Seated.

LONDONDERRY, October 23.—Justin McCarthy, Parnellite, has been awarded the seat in the house of commons which he contested for at the recent election against Charles Edward Lewis, conservative.

CHOLERA IN JAPAN.

Seventy Thousand Deaths in a Few Months—A Dreadful Scourge.

TOKIO, JAPAN, October 3.—[Special Correspondence.]—The cholera has been playing sad havoc in Japan. There have been over 100,000 cases and 70,000 deaths. The old theory that cholera would not attack foreigners, has proven a false one. At first, none of the foreign residents were attacked, but within the last month, just as the disease is gradually dying out among the natives, there has been quite a number of cases right here in Trukiji, where the members of my family are staying. We have had the disease all around us. We are residing at No. 15, and there have been several cases at Nos. 13 and 14. One child died in two hours after being seized with the disease. The Japanese servants all over this concession, have had the disease, and a man could never tell when he woke up in the morning whether or not he would find a policeman out to the waiting cart and disinfecting the premises. I had a barber who came every other morning to shave me, for which I paid him one Mexican dollar a month. He doesn't come any more. The cholera carried him off. His brother was second cook of the American legation. After visiting his brother, one day, he went into the city and never came back. He had been seized with cholera in the street and was carried to the hospital, where he died two hours after. A servant dropped in at the house of one of our neighbors, and died while talking with other servants. The master of the house never dreamed of the death until he saw the police carrying the body out of the house. Our life here for two or three weeks has been one of terror and anxiety, for we never knew when we would fall victims to the plague. At first it did not concern us individually more than vegetables, and fish. We drank only water, which had been boiled two hours. The theory was that with precautions foreigners were exempt. We went out on the streets every day, and would see hundreds of patients being carried to the hospitals on litters, but we felt no special alarm. We would see patients carried by our gate every day, too, and even when Japanese died right next door we never flinched. But when one or two foreigners died with the disease right close to us, then that became a different matter and we began to be frightened. We thought of going into the country, but about the time we got ready to go every foreign physician had returned to Tokio, and there was not a place in Japan at that time where we could have any medical attention outside of Tokio, except, of course, native physicians, whom we preferred not to risk.

WE ARE STILL HERE.

Nearly all of those who went into the country for the summer returned only to be seized with the dreadful disease. Only about twelve or fourteen foreigners here and in Yokohama have died so far, but several are now very sick. I was three time threatened with the disease, but every time I got a physician in ten minutes and was relieved, I am satisfied most cases will yield when the physician arrives in time. The treatment is to put the patient under the influence of an opiate at once, and this is usually done by hypadermic injections. Only last Saturday I was taken down and the physician gave me three hypadermic injections during the day. It is fearful to be so badly frightened, as we have been, but we hope for better things now that the weather is growing cooler. In fact, we foreigners do not expect any further danger from the awful disease which has caused the death of so many thousands of natives.

FRED S. MANSFIELD.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD.

A Pr[osp]ector Finds a Valuable Vein in Massachusetts.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., October 23.—H. D. Ward, who has been prospecting for gold, silver, copper and sulphur about North Adams for years, and who started the exploration in the place where sulphur, gold and copper are now being mined successfully, has struck gold and silver about four miles from here, on Love's farm, at the foot of Graylock mountain, near a mine worked by Quakers ninety years ago. The state assayer writes that it nets $50 a ton, and Ward has bought 400 acres of land adjoining. The land there cannot be bought for any price. Ward says he followed the Quaker mine on the same theory on which the famous Comstock lode was discovered. A company will be formed immediately.

EARTHQUAKE EFFECTS,

Geyser Springs Spouting in Summerville, South Carolina.

CHARLESTON, October 23.—The development of geyser's at Summerville by yesterday's shocks is corroborated, but the kerosene oil found in the water is explained by the fact that refuse from a creosoting oil factory has been emptied into the drains in which the geyser's appeared. It is reported that water was thrown up fully three feet from one of the geysor's near Ashly river. The water is as cold as ice and clear as a crystal. No new disturbances occurred there today.

The city has been absolutely quiet today, nothing in way of an earthquake disturbance occurring to disturb the normal condition of affairs. Information from Summerville shows the same condition there.

FORT MORGAN, Ala., October 23.—A slight shock of earthquake was felt here at nine o'clock this morning. The shock was preceded by a low, rumbling sound, which lasted several seconds. Half an hour later a second shock was felt, accompanied by a rumbling noise resembling distant thunder. No damage was done. The sky was clear and the gulf smooth as glass at the time.

Congressional Nominations.

CHICAGO, October 23.—The democrats of the third congressional district nominated Mayor Carter Harrison.

PITTSBURG, October 23.—Edward Scull was nominated to-day by the republican conference at Somerset for the seventeenth congressional district. The conferees have been balloting for six weeks.

ST. LOUIS THE VICTOR.

The Baseball Championship of the World Won by the St Louis Nine.

ST. LOUIS, October 23.—[Special.]—The St. Louis Browns became the champion baseball nine of the world by defeating the Chicago White Stockings in a ten inning game by a score of 4 to 3. This gives the Browns four out of six games played. In Chicago the Browns lost two and won one, and when the Chicagoes came to the mound city they expected to win at least one game, but have lost all three. This does away with the seventh game that was to have been played in Cincinnati. The largest crowd that ever saw a game of ball was present. The betting was in favor of the Browns from the start. The game was an almost faultless one.

BASEBALL NOTES.

The Shamrocks, of Cincinnati, will, this afternoon, play a picked nine composed of southern and western league players who are wintering in that city. "Lefty" Marr will pitch for the Shamrocks.

Gus Schmelz will in all probability, manage the Cincinnatis next season. He is a good one.

The Boston management offered the St. Louis Maroons $6,000 for Glasscock and $5,000 salary, but it wouldn't work.

Jimmie Fields, of this year's Savannahs, is with the Athletics, and will play first bag for them on their Cuba trip.

"Phenomenal" Smith, Burns, Greenwood and Trott of the Newarks, have signed for next season with Baltimore.

Lexington Races.

LEXINGTON, October 23.—First race, all ages, 1⅛ miles, Gold Bar won, Little Minnie second, Reostone third. Time 1:55.

Second race, two-year-olds, 1 mile, Terra Cotta won, Banburg second, Wary third. Time 1:44

Third race, all ages, 1¼ miles, Skabeloff won, Woodcraft second, Bob Swim third. Time 2:09½.

Fourth race, two-year-olds, ¾ of a mile, Donnybrook won, Lady Max second, Bancloche third. Time 1:03.

CRIMINALS CONVICTED.

DESPERATE CHARACTERS SENTENCED IN BIRMINGHAM.

The Story of the Crimes for Which Anthony Brantley and Flem Shay will Atone in the Alabama Penitentiary—A Train Wrecker's Deed—Work of Other Dark Characters.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., October 23.—[Special.] On the night of September 12th, William Kirkland and son were driving home near the outskirts of the city when they were attacked by Anthony Brantley and Flem Shay, negroes, who pulled them from the wagon and robbed them. The son ran and left his father at the mercy of the two negroes. Brantly shot Mr. Kirkland in the head stunning him and immediately applied chloroform. After the robbery the negroes went in opposite directions and hid. A stick known to have belonged to Brantly was found near the scene of the scuffle which served a clue to the police who arrested Brantly later in the night, and Shay next morning. The negroes were committed to jail without bail and the trial has occupied three days in the city court. The state has been represented by Solicitor Hawkins, Brown and Callahan; the defense was represented by Messrs. Pearson and Senn. Brantly was put on the stand and said he was on his way to ascertain how near the locality in which Mr. Kirkland was robbed, and as he passed along he heard a report and went in the direction of it and came to town and reported what he had seen and heard. Flem Shay's tale on the stand was very different. He said he, Brantly and a negro by the name of Marshall, who is now in the county jail, left the city together for the purpose of robbing Mr. Kirkland. Shay was to jump in front of the horse and Brantly and Marshall were to knock the occupants of the buggy out. According to Shay's evidence, he was not offered an opportunity to get in his part of the work, as the men were struck before the horse got to where he was hiding. He says they saw the father fall from the buggy and clinch Anthony and saw the son break off through the woods, followed by the negroes. He said that Anthony pulled a pistol and fired, the ball passing in the direction in which he (Shay) was standing. Shay ran some distance in the woods and stopped. Presently another man came up to him and gave him a pistol, a bottle of chloroform and $1.95 in money, telling him to go at once to bed and if questioned as to where he had been to say he had been with him. Shay told a pretty straight tale and his revelation caused considerable sensation in the court room. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. Brantly was sentenced to imprisonment for ninety-nine years and Shay for ten years.

A MAN OF MANY ALIASES.

Detective Sullivan returned to the city from Mississippi, where he captured Harry Stokes, alias Harry Watkins, alias Henry Woods. December 21st a well dressed young man representing himself as a sewing machine merchant went to Messrs. Owen & Bairdwell at Hartsell and said he wanted to drive a buggy to Summerville, which he got and did not return. He came to Birmingham and was met by a woman with whom he went away. Sullivan was sent for Friday and trailed him to Cordova, thence to Jasper, from which place he went to Columbus, Miss. He went to Hazelhurst and sold the horse and buggy for $87.50, which was worth $375. He then went to Jackson, from there to Vicksburg and Greenville. He was captured at Leland, Washington county, Miss., after a struggle, and was taken to Summerville jail. He is wanted badly for horse stealing at various places, among which are Wetumka, Selma, Livingston and others where he has stolen horses.

Mr. Sullivan left this morning for a station near Escambia, Fla., where he goes to capture a man named Hancock, who recently escaped from the Pratt mines by climbing a wire rope 214 feet from the shaft, and who escaped to Georgia and thence to Florida. William Moulton member of the Sullivan detective agency was sent for him and was killed in a hand to hand fight with Hancock, who is a powerful and desperate man. After he had killed Moulton he stripped his clothes of any mark of identification and threw it in a creek. The body was found and identified by tatoo marks on his arms. A large reward is offered for Hancock by the Alabama authorities.

THE FACTS DEVELOPED.

A Georgia Negro Murdered in Westminster, South Carolina.

WESTMINSTER, S.C., October 23.—[Special.]—The facts connected with a brutal tragedy, which was enacted here on the night of the 20th instant, has just been brought to light. It seems that on the evening of that date, two negroes, Wiley Teasley and Neut Webb, both of Hartwell, Ga., arrived here on their way home from Walhalla, where they had been to procure a load of whisky. Being supplied with about thirty gallons, they were in fine spirits, and soon found friends here willing to enjoy it with them. The result was a general drunk among the negroes of the neighborhood, and the middle of the night found them all carousing and rowing at the house of one Sam McDow, where a candy pulling was going on. Finally Neut Webb concluded it was time he and his partner were renewing their journey towards home, but on looking for his friend he was not to be found. Search being instituted the other negro, Wiley Teasley, was found lying on the railroad track near by, in an unconscious condition with a great gash in the back of his head, which looked as if it had been cut with an ax. Webb gathered up his friend, put him in the wagon and resumed his journey for home. On reaching Fair Play, the wounded negro could proceed no further, and was accordingly left there for medical treatment. He grew worse rapidly, and died on Friday.

When the news of his death reached this place, a number of suspected negroes were arrested, but all have been released, except Sam McDow, who is believed to be the murderer.

The murder is the simple result of a drunken row.

A DEVIL'S DEED.

Wreck of a Passenger Train in Pennsylvania.

ALTOONA, October 3.—This afternoon as the regular passenger train from Coal Port to Cresson, of the Cincinnati, Chicago and New York Short Line railroad, was on its way down grade half way between the two places, the engine jumped the track and went over a steep embankment, turning twice over in its descent, killing the fireman and seriously injuring the engineer. The passenger cars remained on the track. As far as can be learned, spikes had been placed in a frog at that point by some miscreant. It is thought to have been the work of Hungarians formerly employed on the road.

A HORRIBLE MURDER.

A Man Pours Kerosene on His Wife's Clothes and Burns Her to Death.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., October 23.—A terrible murder was committed here last night. Silas Laferty quarreled with his wife, and after knocking her down and beating her until she was unconscious, poured a half gallon of coal oil over her clothing, set it on fire and then left her in that awful condition. Richard Williams saw the blaze through the window and ran to the rescue, but when the flames were extinguished the unfortunate woman was burned to a crisp. The husband cannot be found.

A Lawyer Acquitted.

STEVENS POINT, Wis., October 23.—Lawyer Haseltine was last evening acquitted of the murder of A. E. Morse, a well known banker. The case has been on trial a week and attracted great interest throughout the state on account of the social prominence of the parties involved.

Lynching in Florida.

APPALACHICOLA, Fla., October 23.—John and Lot Renen were lynched today at Blounstown, Franklin county, in this state, for the murder of John Griffin on October 2nd.

FRANCE'S AMBASSADOR.

The Emperor of Germany Receives M. Herbette—Mr. Tanner's Trouble.

BERLIN, October 23.—Emperor William received M. Herbette, the new French ambassador in a formal audience today. Count Herbert Bismarck was present. M. Herbette, being unable to speak German, read an address in French expressing a desire to take his stand on the ground of common interests to both nations. Emperor William replied he hoped M. Herbette's wide experience of affairs would assist him to accomplish his mission and that the ambassador might fully rely on his support in serving the interests of France and Germany. The audience was of a friendly character.

The clamor against Mr. Tanner, United States consul at Chemnitz, continues daily in the newspapers. Mr. Tanner is preparing to answer the resolutions adopted by the chamber of commerce of that town. He will explain that he did not pass an isolated judgment of his own in his report to the government at Washington respecting the practice of manufacturers at Chenitz, but embodied in it the views of large American buyers, who have been dealing for many years with Chemnitz houses.

A BERLIN SCANDAL.

A Member of the Emperor's Household Arrested for Forgery.

BERLIN, October 23.—A scandal has been caused in the highest circles by the arrest of Baron Otho Von Schleinitz, a nephew of the deceased minister of that name, and a member of the emperor's household. He is charged with acting as agent of a band of men leagued together for the purpose of extorting money from wealthy and high born persons, and with selling forged titles and decorations. Schleinitz was a captain in the Prussian guards. He gambled and ran through a fortune. On discovery of his crimes, the police favored his escape to France out of regard for his uncle, who was then alive. Since the latter's death, Schleinitz has been traced to England, where he is charged with the forgery of a bill of exchange for 2,400 marks. He has just been extradited. An accomplice, named Lange, who was concerned in the forgery, committed suicide on hearing of Schleinitz's arrest.

HOW IT WAS MANAGED.

The French Minister of Commerce as a Strategist.

PARIS, October 23.—A curious discovery is now puzzling the politicians of Paris. Recently a workmen's congress was held in the city of Lyons. The attendance was large and the audience was enthusiastic. During one of the sessions, the anarchist element secured the predominance. They became rampant and finally tore down the tri-color. It now transpires that the congress was subsidized by the government. It is explained that the proposal to hold the congress did not meet with favor among the various trades-unions and that Lockroy, minister of commerce, in order to save the project from failure obtained railway passes for all delegates wo would go and provided $750 from the state treasury to pay the expenses of the congress.

THE EGYPTIAN SQUABBLE.

The French Want Great Britain to Evacuate Egypt.

PARIS, October 23.—The Figaro urges Premier Defreycinet to plainly put to England the question whether she will evacuate Egypt.

"It is veritable treason," says the Figaro, "to miss the only opportunity the London convention affords France to bring this subject before Europe and demand that the English withdraw from Egypt by the date the convention fixed for it." The paper then asks whether an interpellation or demonstration is necessary to awaken the mind of the French government to a remembrance of France's rights in Egypt.

The Great Sobranje.

LONDON, October 23.—The Bulgarian government has announced to the powers that the sobranje will meet on October 31, and after verifying the election returns, immediately elect a ruler.

Prince Alexander has requested the sobranje to ignore him as a candidate for the Bulgarian throne. The Bulgarian government is endeavoring to persude Roumelian deputies to refrain from attending the sobranje on the day when the successor to Prince Alexander is chosen. A majority of them promised to remain away.

The Scotch Miners.

EDINBURG, October 23.—In a dispute between the Fife-Clackmanan coal mine proprietors and the colliers the arbitrator has decided that the former broke their contracts in restricting the output of coal, and condemned them to pay a fine of five shillings per day to the miners thrown out of work by the restriction and cost of the injury. The decision is of great importance throughout Scotland, where restriction is general, and no fewer than 6,000 miners are affected. The present is the first decision which has been made relative to the question of restriction.

English Socialists.

LONDON, October 23.—The socialists of London gave a banquet tonight in honor of one of their leaders, who was recently released from prison. A number of incendiary speeches were made. Mr. Queich, editor of Justice, said that if peaceful efforts failed, hundreds of thousands of persons were ready to stand behind barricades and take pot shots at their enemies. Hyndman said the proposed procession of the poor people of London, on the Lord Mayor's day, had not been abandoned, and that the aldermen were shaking like jelly fishes at the idea of meeting their miserable poverty-stricken fellow citizens.

Senator Beck's Speech.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., October 23.—Senator Beck addressed a large audience at Beck's hall tonight at a democratic congressional rally. He discussed the national issues and attacked Senator Sherman, who recently spoke here, for his silver views, and charged him with the conspiracy in demonetizing silver in 1873.

Fire at Shreveport.

NEW ORLEANS, October 23.—Fire broke out this afternoon in Cadd's carriage factory, at Shreveport, destroying that building and fifteen residences and places of business. Loss estimated at $50,000.

A Monument to Luther.

BERLIN, October 23.—Emperor William has given 50 000 marks to erect a monument to Martin Luther in Berlin.

RICHARDSON'S RESIGNATION.

A Change in the Control of the Savannah Daily Times.

SAVANNAH, GA., October 23.—[Special.]—B H Richardson, who for the past three years, has filled the positions of president, general manager and editor of the Savannah Daily Times, tendered his resignation on the first of the month, the combined duties being too onerous. At a meeting of the directors yesterday, his resignation was accepted and J. J. Dale was elected president. Mr. Richardson was tendered the position of editor and requested also to continue the discharge of the duties of general manager for the present, but it is not definitely known whether he will accept. The impression is that he will sever his connection with the paper and remove from Savannah. The Times is on a good footing, very popular and doing well. It has bright prospects and with increased force its success in the future will be even greater than in the past.

THE DAVIDSON ESTATE.

Irish Heirs Going to the Courts to Recover the Property.

AUGUSTA, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—The estate left by Hon. Jno. Davidson, which at first promised to be divided among the heirs-at-law without trouble, will be dragged into the courts and will there stay many years. The heirs who came here from Ireland, it is learned, will file a bill to recover from the estate $30,000 with interest, and $5,000 more of money said to be held in trust by Mr. Davidson, the property of his mother. For this money he has never rendered an account, it is alleged, and they will sue for it. This will be fought by the resident heirs, and a little legal struggle is anticipated. The case is exciting great interest here and everybody is manifesting interest in it.

BY HIS OWN HAND.

GEORGE W. M'KINNEY SUICIDES IN THE STATIONHOUSE.

He is Arrested for Assault with Intent to Murder and While Confined in His Cell Sends a Ball Crushing Through His Brain—He Leaves a Letter to His Sisters, Etc., Etc.

George McKinney, a prisoner in the city prison, blew his brains out with a new Smith & Wesson pistol, this morning about half past two o'clock.

McKinney was in prison awaiting departure for Tennessee, where he was wanted for an assault with intent to murder. He was arrested yesterdoy morning by Stationhouse Keeper Buchanan, and would have been en route to Tennessee this morning had he not shot himself. When McKinney was arrested and conducted to the city prison, he was closely and carefully searched and everything was taken away from him. Stationhouse Keeper Buchanan left the city prison last night at half past twelve and when Stationhouse Keeper Ryan came on duty he made his usual rounds, and found everything all right. McKinney was sitting in one chair with his feet in another. Mr. Ryan returned to the office and began writing. Officer Thompson went to the stables about half past two to put up the horses, having just brought in a prisoner. Just at this time the report of a pistol rang out. Mr. Ryan wheeled around upon his stool and looking towards the cells, remarked to himself:

"Wonder who fired that torpedo."

He hurried toward a cell in which Gabe Valentino and John Hopkins, two white men, were confined, and asked:

"Which one of you fired that torpedo?"

"Neither one," answered Valentino "but some one in the alley fired at us.'

Mr. Ryan stepped to the next cell, and looking in saw the prisoner in the cell lying flat upon the floor, a large pool of blood about his head. In the chair in which he had been sitting when Mr. Ryan saw him last was a bright pistol. Mr. Ryan hurried out to call Officer Thompson, who had heard the shot, and thinking some one had shot Mr. Ryan, was rushing towards the prison. Quickly Mr. Ryan told him what he had seen and heard and together the two officers opened the cell and went in. They found the man alive but breathing in a stuttering labored manner. A large hole in the right side of the head over the ear through which the brain was oozing showed where the ball had entered. In a chair with the pistol was a note. It had just been written on a telegraph blank and showed that he meant no foolishness. The letter read:

Dear Sisters.—When you read these sad lines my poor weary spirit will have flown from this prison-house of clay and from these cruel walls of stone and iron—from the power of merciless, money-loving men, to the paradise of an all-merciful God. My life has not, for some years, been worth living, and now it is intolerable. I have no hope for future pleasure on earth, and there is certainly no worse hell elsewhere. Do not weep, but count me at rest—sweet rest from the distracting sorrows of this life. May our merciful father send the holy comforts to your poor hearts. The laws of man have no further claim upon my worthless body. Take it and do as you like. Good bye, and God bless you. Your loving brother,

GEORGE MCKINNEY.

To Mrs. M. P. Orr, Chattanooga, Tenn.
Mrs. Julia Price, 28 Winnie street, Lexington, Ky.

P. S.—I am not afraid of men, but care not to live.

Messengers were sent for physicians. Drs Westmoreland and Hammond responded, and stated that the man was dying. He lived until just before three o'clock, when he died upon the cell floor.

Chief Connolly was notified of the shooting, and repaired to police headquarters at once. The possession of the pistol by McKinny is a mystery. He was too carefully searched when locked up to have concealed it. During the afternoon when prisoners were being charged he was in the hallway, and it is believed some friend handed him a pistol through a window from the alley. Chief Connolly is giving the matter a thorough investigation, but so far attaches no blame to any one. Some officers think he may have gotten a pistol from some other prisoner.

WHY M'KINNEY WAS ARRESTED.

G. W. McKinney, a printer, was arrested in Atlanta yesterday morning, because he is wanted in Sewanee, Tenn., for an assault with intent to murder.

For McKinney's arrest $150 reward was offered.

Several months ago McKinney was managing a printing office in Sewanee, Tenn. In the same town there was a tailor named Pillett, to whom McKinney owed a bill. The bill caused a quarrel between the two men, which resulted in McKinney shooting at Pillett. Immediately after the shooting McKinney skipped out and last week reached Atlanta. He found work in the Franklin job printing house, and without attracting attention began life again among strangers. A few days ago Stationhouse Keeper Buchanan happened to see McKinney and at a glance noticed that he resembled a description on file at police headquarters. Mr. Buchanan found the description, and then seeking McKenney yesterday morning, compared them. The description was perfect and an arrest was made, and the prisoner conducted to police headquarters. After reaching the prison, McKenney admitted that he was the man wanted. He was carefully searched and locked up to await telegram from Tennessee.

The deceased was rather a handsome man, and wore a suit of neat fitting black. He was about five feet nine inches high, and weighed about one hundred and sixty-five pounds. His hair was black and wore neither whiskers nor mustache.

McKinney's arrest in and the cause is detailed in the story of his arrest written early last night—long before his suicide was thought of.

TOO MANY WIVES.

J. P. Curran, an Atlanta Tailor, Charged With Bigamy—Taken to Marietta.

J. P. Curran, a tailor well known in Atlanta, was arrested by Chief Connolly and Captain Crim yesterday, and given a cell in the city prison upon a charge of bigamy.

Curran is now in jail in Marietta.

During the fall of '84 Curran made his appearance in Atlanta. He was a total stranger in the city, but being a good worker soon secured employment with one of the many merchant tailors of the city. Curran quickly developed a smooth, oily tongue, and when an organization was formed among the workingmen in the city he was among the organizers. Curran was a neat looking fellow and soon after reaching Atlanta began cultivating the acquaintance of the ladies. Among other ladies whom Curran met was Mrs. Lois Galvin, a widow residing on Fair street. Mrs. Galvin was the mother of two children, and possessed some property. She is a prepossessing looking lady, and in a short time after she and Curran met an engagement resulted. Curran was a Catholic and Mrs. Galvin a Protestant, and when the time for their marriage came they boarded the train and went to Marietta and were married. Mrs. Galvin's mother objected to the marriage, but her objections were overruled when her daughter came home as Mrs. Curran. The marriage took place something over a year ago, and during the past year Mr. and Mrs. Curran have lived happily. Several months ago a rumor of a previous marriage, in which Curran was represented to have taken part, began to circulate in Atlanta. No one knew where the rumor originated but it was generally understood that the marriage had taken place in Boston about 1874. Some one more curious than others wrote to Boston to ascertain the truth of the rumor and in a short time ascertained that J. P. Curran, a tailor, had, in '74 married a Miss Margaret Cahill, of that city, and that the lady was then living in Charlestown, Mass. A correspondence was opened with the lady and through it the Atlanta ascertained that Curran had left the lady to whom he had been married in 74 in 78 and had come south. At this point the correspondence was turned over to Chief Connolly, who began an investigation. By the investigation he became satisfied that the Atlanta Curran was the same man who married Miss Cahill in Boston. After securing all information necessary, Chief Connolly carried the matter before the grand jury but that body declined to do any thing with it because Curran had married in Cobb county. On yesterday the chief ascertained that Curran was preparing to leave Atlanta, and at once caused his arrest Curran denied the former marriage charged to him, and and says that some mistake has been made. Last night he was transferred to Cobb county, where he will remain in jail, if he cannot make bond, until the charge against him can be investigated.

MR. COOPER SUBJECT TO THE MEETING

He Says that He is in for a Thorough Organization.

The chamber of commerce meeting of Friday night, was the local political sensation of yesterday.

The place proposed by the meeting for making a municipal ticket, met with general favor, but a great many citizens asserted that they would not be bound by anything until the mass meeting of Tuesday night had transpired, but everybody appeared perfectly willing to abide by the action of the mass meeting. A great many persons doubted the ability of the meeting however, to select a committee of fifty which would prove satisfactory to all people, and a great many more were positive, absolutely, that no committee of fifty men could agree upon a ticket. During the day Mr. Cooper's candidacy was freely discussed on the streets, and a desire was expressed among his friends to know what position he would assume toward the mass meeting. Some of his friends asserted that he would join in the meeting, while others said that he would not.

At one time it was currently remarked that Mr. Cooper had called in several of his most intimate friends with whom he had consulted and that a conclusion had been reached by them, but what that conclusion was no one appeared to know. Last night a CONSTITUTION reporter called upon Mr. Cooper and asked:

"It is said, Mr. Cooper, that you have had a consultation with your friends as to whether in your candidacy for mayor, you will submit to the action of the mass meeting of citizens called for next Tuesday night. Is it true?"

"No. Entertaining the positive views I have on the subject, I do not need to consult with my friends as to my action in the matter. The call is a fair one, and the public is put on ample notice. All voters are invited without regard to party or policy, and I believe it to be the duty of all good citizens to abide by and support the ticket thus proposed. Such a solution of the difficulties that surround us commends itself to my judgement. No one deplores, more than I do, the differences that exist among our citizens and no one will exert himself more than I will to bring about a return of that unity of thought, of purpose and of action which is so essential to the happiness of our people and the prosperity of our city. Whatever ambitious hopes I may have entertained I am willing to sacrifice, if necessary, to the good of Atlanta. I value the harmony of our people and the prosperity of the city more than I cherish the hope of personal promotion, and my further candidacy is subject to the action of that meeting."

"Then if the committee of fifty does not agree upon you you are out of the race?"

"Of course I am, except so far as I can aid and support the nominee of the meeting."

AN ATLANTA INVENTION.

The United States Automatic Water Cut Off and What is Said of it.

Yesterday letters patent were received in Atlanta for the "United States Automatic water cut off" which was recently invented by Dr. W. G. Browne, of this city. A stock company has been formd for the manufacture in Atlanta of this patent on an extensive scale. Its main object is to furnish an automatic cut off which will prevent the bursting of pipes by the freezing of water in them, and that object appears to have been perfectly attained in this patent. Everybody who has seen it has been struck with its simplicity and with the certainty of its operation. As the water in the pipes grows colder and the temperature approaches the freezing point, this machine by an application of the principle of metallic contraction, infallibly cuts off the flow of water into the pipes and lets out the water which they already hold. In all the great cities the bursting of water pipes during the winter is a source of untold expense and annoyance. During the past few winters great trouble on this score has been experienced in Atlanta. An apparatus which will save pipes from bursting is bound to be in great demand everywhere. That this work can be done by the Atlanta patent is not doubted by any of the experts who have examined it. Mr. W. G. Richards, superintendent of the Atlanta water works, said yesterday:

"This automatic water cut off is an excellent invention. I have examined it and can see how admirably it will work. It is simple; it cannot fail to cut off the water as it falls towards the freezing point, and there is nothing in it to get out of order. It can be made of great service not only in preventing the bursting of water pipes, but would also be just as effective for automatic fire extinguishers. While the contraction of the metal in this machine would save the pipes, its expansion under an unusual heat would make it a reliable fire extinguisher."

"Is there much trouble in Atlanta from bursted pipes?"

"A great deal, and it has been increasing every winter for the past few years. This building has been flooded several times by the bursting of water pipes. An automatic cut off will relieve all apprehension of such accidents on cold nights. It will save the trouble of turning the water out of the pipes before retiring, and will prevent accidents from those sudden and unexpected changes which freeze the water while the family are asleep and wake them up by the explosion of the pipes."

ILLUMINATING THE EARTH.

A Meteor Rushes Across the Skies—It is Seen by Many People.

A large, brilliant meteor was seen by Atlantians who were out about twelve o'clock last night.

The meteor traveled from west to east.

Just before midnight the darkness was more intense than at any other time during the night. Clouds were scattered about promiscuously, shutting out the stars and weather prophets who were abroad were predicting rain. About two to three minutes before twelve a brilliant strong light appeared directly overhead. The light was intense and of a reddish cast, such as is made by a piece of red hot iron. It made the earth perfectly plain to the eye, so much so that a pin could be seen, and attracted the attention of all who saw it. Naturally when the light first flashed up everybody who noticed began looking about for it. When first seen it was directly overhead—at an angle of 90 degrees and was moving at a terrific speed towards the east. As it went a hissing, boiling sound accompanied it. It was about as large as a flour barrel, and as it neared appeared to be rolling over and over. It was round in shape, and when at about 25 degrees broke into a hundred fragments, each one of which took a course of its own and disappeared—apparently "going out." When the body broke up it made a report which was distinctly heard. Every member of the police department observed the meteor.

Geronimo's Gang.

NEW ORLEANS, October 23.—Geronimo, Natches and thirteen bucks and seventeen squaws and papooses, heavily guarded by United States troops, passed through this city this afternoon. There was a large crowd of people at the depot and ferry landing, anxious to get a look at the savages.

THE CENTRAL CITY.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE PROPOSED FLORIDA AIR LINE.

How the Lane-Tharpe Charter Railroad to Florida is Progressing—The State Fair—A Talk With Colonel Grier as to the Outlook—Other Interesting News from Macon.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—For some time your correspondent has been advised as to the work being done on the "Lane-Tharpe" charter for an air line road from Macon to Florida.

Meeting a railroad gentlemen today, who seemed to be well informed on the subject, your correspondent lost no time in buttonholing him.

"How is the air line progressing?" queried the scribe.

"Oh, bloomingly. The locating engineers are going ahead as fast as possible, and have already located fifty miles of the track since work was begun, about the first of September."

The grading force began at a point a few miles South of Macon, and have graded three and a half miles. The road will be "pushed for all it is worth."

"How about complications regarding charter privileges?"

"Well, it stands this way: The counsel for the Air Line advise the projectors that under the old Lane charter they might not be able to hold their ground, as the supreme court had already declared unconstitutional a certain part of section V., of the revised statutes, and had intimated that the balance would be declared unconstitutional, so they obtained possession of the 'Tharpe charter' which was operated by special act of the legislature, under which they organized and are now and have gone ahead and are locating the road, and these two, the Lane and the Tharpe, are the only charters ever granted any road from Macon to Florida."

"How about the Florida extension of the Macon and Athens?"

"Well they were compelled to organize and operate as provided by act of legislature, as rendered on page 373-4, code of Georgia. Miller, §1689 (2) you will find this:

Road, how extended:—Any railroad company now existing or hereafter organized under the laws of this state may, under the provisions of this section extended its railroad from any part named in its charter or articles of association, or may build branch roads from any point or points on its line of road. Before making any such extensions or building any such branch roads, such railroad shall, by resolution of its board of directors, to be entered in the records of its proceedings, designate the route of such proposed extension or branch in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, and file a certified copy of such record in the office of the secretary of the state, and cause the same to be recorded as provided in section 1689, (a) and thereafter such railroad company shall have the right to make such extension or branch as if it had been authorized in its charter or articles of association.

Section 1689 (a) says:

Railroad companies, how incorporated—Any number of persons, not less than three, may form a company, and shall give ninety days' notice of the formation of such company in such paper, daily or weekly, in the several counties through which the proposed existing railroad shall run, by inserting in said papers once a week during said ninety days, a copy of the articles of the association hereafter referred to, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating a railroad for public use, in the conveyance of persons and property, or for the purpose of maintaining and operating any railroad already constructed for the public use.

Now, after complying with all these requirements, the Macon and Athens company will have a valid charter, otherwise they have not. Then, when one is procured in that way, it will be exactly similar to the Lane charter, under which the Air-Line company were unwilling to take the risk of reorganizing and operating. Therefore, they must get a charter from the legislature if they get one at all.

They may get some man in Houston, or other county to go to work on his own land and assert that he is going to build a railroad, but they can't condemn the land or collect toll without a charter, which means they cannot build a railroad without a charter.

Colonel Jeff Lane, principal contractor, is in New York, and has about organized his construction company, and it is almost certain that work will be begun in less than thirty days.

The State Fair.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—Your correspondent met Colonel E. C. Grier today and had an interesting talk with him on the state fair, which opens Monday.

"How about the fair, colonel?"

"Oh, the fair is just going to be the boss fair ever held in Georgia. There are more speed horses already entered than were ever entered at any October fair, and still they come. Montgomery, Columbus, Savannah and several Kentucky stables are yet to put in an appearance, and they have given us notice that they are on the way. Eighteen head left the fair at Hagerstown, Md., yesterday, and we are looking for them any hour. The lists in hand now will overbalance any previous exhibit. Our only fear is that we may be crowded for stable room."

"How about cattle?"

"Well, sir, Jerseys, Jerseys, world without end, is the way to put it. We will have the finest exhibit of the dove eyed daughters of the channel islands ever gathered in the south. We will have other breeds, too, Holsteins particularly, eighteen head having been received from Atlanta yesterday."

"How are farm products?"

"The best line I ever knew exhibited. Holton and Bolingbroke, and places more remote, are preparing to exhibit."

"The exhibit will be bigger than ever before in the machinery department. The Mason cotton harvester, much to my regret, will not be exhibited. I have just received a letter from the inventor stating that as he was obliged to make a display at two other places at the same time, it would be impossible to have another machine ready in time for us."

"How is the track and grounds?"

"In fine condition. The track has been sprinkled and rolled and walked on until racing men say they never saw it finer. The grounds have been put in the best possible trim, and everything is fixed up in tip top style."

"Any excursions?"

"Oh, yes. One feature will be an excursion Wednesday from Atlanta to Macon, for the benefit of the darkys for whom we will arrange a grand baseball and football game. Tell your Atlanta folks and the CONSTITUTION gang that they must pack up and come for everybody else will be here."

United States Court.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—In the United States court today, the case of R. J. Baker & Co. vs. T. S. Burton, an eleven hundred guano suit, was up before Judge Speer. Hardeman & Davis, of Macon, appeared for the plaintiff, and Colonel J. F. Watson, of Smithville, and Hon. E. G. Simmons, of Americus, for the defense. After hearing the able argument of the defense, Judge Speer did not care to hear further, and delivered one of the clearest, strongest and most logical opinions on the question that has ever been made in our courts. The case was decided in favor of the defense, and the victory was awarded to Mr. Burton. Colonel J. F. Watson is a candidate for county judge of Lee county, and is supported by the local bar, and the bar of Americus. He is an able lawyer and will make Lee county a good judge.

Recorder's Court.

MACON, October 23.—[Special.]—Calvin Gorhea, a turpentine negro, was arrested on the streets drunk last night, by Officers Abel and Mosely. He said: "I came to town to see de elephant an' de taggers got me," and proceeded to tear their hands with his teeth. He inflicted severe wounds on both officers, but after a hard struggle they jugged him. They almost had to fight their way out through the big crowd that gathered around the hall. He was sent to the chaingang for fifty days today.

Cut in Four Places.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—Today in Warrior district, Theodore Jennings had some little falling out with some one. Jerry Green, a seventy-four year old farmer, of that community, was present. Green said something about it, when Jennings, who is a young man, fell upon him with a knife and cut him in four places. One gash, four inches long on the left arm, severed the muscle; another, three inches long, on the left breast, a stab in the arm and a gash on the hand. Dr. Vance dressed the wounds. They are very serious and the old man, who has never before had a difficulty, is in a critical condition from the loss of blood.

The County Primary.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—The primary election today in Bibb county for county officers, resulted as follows: Clerk superior court, Dan H. Adams; sheriff, W. Sam Wescott; tax receiver, R. J. Anderson; tax collector, C. B. Massenburg; county surveyor, C. J. Wheeler; coroner, W. H. Hodnett.

The opposition was against the clerk, sheriff and coroner, and the above named gentlemen won over their numerous opponents by large and handsome majorities.

No Transfer on the Cars.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—Beginning Monday morning Superintendent Voss will run two lines of street cars, one from the city hall and the other from the Brown house to the park. One fare passengers who take cars with banners on them will go straight through. There will be no transfers.

Personal and Society.

MACON, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—The Phi Delta Theta social club met on last Friday evening at the residence of Major R. F. Lawton. A nicely arranged programme was carried out and all seemed to spend a most delightful time.

P. E. Boyd, well-known in Macon, died at Leary today.

Misses Gussie and Perle May-Herrington have returned from a summer visit to Harper's Ferry, West Virginia.

Dr. W. H. McIntosh, a former pastor of First Baptist church, has removed, with his family, to Macon.

Dr. A. J. Battle is visiting Sandersville.

Mark Issacs, after an eleven years' residence in London, England, is visiting his old home in Macon.

COLUMBUS CHRONICLES.

Items of Interest Caught in the Chattahoochee City.

COLUMBUS, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—Doris's circus showed here this afternoon and tonight. Both performances were largely attended, and the city has been full of country people since early morning. The performance gave very general satisfaction.

Trains crossed Bull creek bridge on the Georgia Midland railroad today. The bridge has just been completed and is an elegant structure. Work over this road is rapidly progressing.

The preliminary survey of the Columbus and Florida railroad was begun yesterday, and tonight the corps had reached a point about seven miles south of the city. The first line will be run to Albany.

John Drake, colored, was arrested here today, after being chased a mile for stealing nineteen dollars from another negro in Russell county last night. He was turned over to the Alabama authority.

News from Corsicana, Texas, has been received that it was not Dr. R. U. Palmer who was killed on the 8th, but his brother, John A. Palmer.

The ginhouse belonging to Torbert Bros., at Society Hill, Ala., was burned yesterday, with a few bales of cotton. This is the second time these gentlemen have lost their ginhouse this season. The fire was accidental and it is said there was no insurance.

Columbus was left without water tonight. A break occurred in the main pipe where it enters Broad street, which necessitated the cutting off of the water from the entire city. Repairs are now being made, but it will be sometime tomorrow morning before water is turned on again.

For Mayor of Athens.

ATHENS, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—The race for mayor of Athens will be close and exciting between Wm. L. Wood and Asbury H. Hodgson.

The Walton Guards.

MONROE, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—The Walton Guards were inspected by Adjutant-General Stephens on Friday. The prize drill finally was reduced to a contest between Privates W. A. Snow and G. E. Blasingame, resulting in the success of the former. The banquet to the officers was a great success.

A DELIGHTFUL EVENING.

Entertainment For the Benefit of Charleston Sufferers.

Tuesday night one of the most charming entertainments of the season will be given at DeGive's opera house for the benefit of the Charleston sufferers.

This entertainment has been arranged by some of the Christian and big hearted ladies of the city, and the good cause for which it is given should bring out a crowded house. The price of admission has been placed within the reach of all—twenty-five cents. There will be no excuse for not attending. Go and encourage these good ladies.

The following is the

AN IMPORTANT ENTERPRISE.

The New Firm of Curry, Jacobs & Co., and the Purchase of the Walter A. Taylor Company's Big Business.

During the past week a very important partnership has been formed in Atlanta. It re-establishes and enlarges a business which had been crippled, brings an able business man with ample capital to Atlanta, and makes one of the strongest firms in the south.

Mr. W. D. Curry, of Cartersville, is recognized as one of the very best druggists in the state, a close buyer, and a safe and enterprising business man. He has made a fortune in Cartersville in the wholesale and retail drug business, and established an enviable reputation there, and will make an important addition to our commercial system. He becomes the junior partner of the firm of Curry, Jacobs & Co., which has bought the retail business of Joseph Jacobs, added a wholesale department, and purchased the Walter A. Taylor company, which owns the specialties manufactured under the name. Mr. Joseph Jacobs is well known as perhaps the most accomplished pharmaceutist in the state, a successful business man, and a popular and public spirited citizen. Dr. Walter A. Taylor, the proprietor of Taylor's Premium Cologne, Sweet Gum and Mullein, and Huckleberry Cordial, is known all over America. His specialties are very singular and have enormous sales. They are bought at five thousand dollar lots by the leading druggists in New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans, Galveston, Detroit, and other American cities. They are standard in every state in the union, and the demand increases every year. Doctor Taylor has had thirteen men constantly on the road, and has employed a large force in the factory here. He has run a printing office to do his printing and has frequently given a single order for 20,000 boxes.

Under the new firm the manufacture of these specialties will be enlarged so that orders will be promptly filled. There will be added the manufacture of Curry's Liver Compound, various remedies patented by Mr. Jacobs and a full line of fluid and solid extracts, and all pharmaceutical preparations. It will be the completest establishment of this kind south of Baltimore. A full line of drugs and medicines for the wholesale trade is arriving daily, and this firm proposes to offer unsurpassed advantages to southern buyers. The retail trade will be continued as usual, with an additional force of clerks to meet the increased patronage.

The firm is a strong one. It has ample capital, enterprise and ability, and will make a great success. We commend it and its specialties to the readers of THE CONSTITUTION.

ARP'S LETTER.

THE CHEROKEE PHILOSOPHER'S WEEKLY BUDGET.

A Trip on the Mountain After Lightwood—The Accident on the Return, and How Near William Came to Being Killed—The Charms of Country Compared With City Life.

Variety is the spice of life. I had a good lot of spice the other day. I went on the mountain with John to get a load of lightwood. The road was bad—very bad—and on our place a deep rut had washed out, and I was afraid we would have trouble as we came back. We sidled round it as we went up, and I thought we could do so as we came down. The day was hot—awful hot—and I helped John cut and split and prize up the buttcuts until I was tired—very tired. The buttcuts of a pine tree that has blown down and left the root half buried is always good lightwood. We worked up three of them and a good lot of limbs and knots and had a splendid load. It was piled up three feet high and then rounded up with limbs and we started home. John was sitting straddle of the ridge pole with his legs braced right and left, and I was perched on a lower seat at the rear. We got along pretty well for awhile, but when we got to the siding where the deep rut was, John tried to dodge it by a flank movement, but the load was too heavy, and the wagon took a slide and a twist and the first thing we knew it come right down on the rut with a shock and a crash that broke a hind wheel all to pieces and threw the wagon over and spilled all the lightwood and sent John about a rod over in the bushes, and as for me, well I never come so near being killed or crippled in my life. It makes me shudder now to think of it for I had the ax to carry and the fact is, I was too old, and tired to show any agility and I was relying upon John and it all run through my mind just before we got to the bad place that supposin the wagon should turn over. The wheels are awful dry and the tires are loose and supposin it should careen down in the ditch and break and supposin I should have my legs all tangled up among those limbs and knots, what would become of me? So I just gently eased my corporosity down off that wagon and watched for the catastrophe. I believe that if I had stayed on that wagon I should have been badly hurt, perhaps ruined, and shall always attribute my escape to that act of heroism in getting down in time. John, poor fellow, picked himself up in good middling order, and seeing me all safe exclaimed: "Bless God, you wern't up dar. I nebber see you get off" The horses behaved beautiful. The two wheels that were in the air spun round beautifully. The double tree and single-trees came to a perpendicular, and it took some time to untangle things. After while we got the lightwood piled up on the side of the bank and the wagon straightened up and we cut a long pole for the axle to slide on, and slowly we slid home without any signs of hilarity. There is nothing like the variety of a farmer's life. We got another wagon and went back after that pine, and it is all straightened out in the wood house now. I believe in pine—lots of pine—wherewith to cheer the winter fireside by night, and kindle a quick fire in the morning. It is one thing that we are not stingy of. Grates and coal will do very well for cities and towns, but they won't compare with the big open fireplace and the old back log and the heavy dogirons, and a chance to punch the fire and see the myriads of sparks float up the chimney. The children can pop corn and roast potatoes, and parch gubbers, and sometimes when the cook is off on a spell we can make coffee and toast bread in the family room. Some of the chaps came home Friday and had a big time for I dug the gubbers and they picked them from the vines, and Saturday morning they got up early and slipped over to the fish pond and killed some ducks—teal ducks with blue wings that are a rare delicacy, and they killed some squirrels and doves and a partridge, and we had a splendid game supper for them, and they were proud of their success. There is a nice little boat on the pond, and for the first time, they managed to get their mother to take a ride, and she behaved nicely considering her age and maternal dignity. When the children and grandchildren come to see us she always surrenders and is calm and serene.

I met a genial friend in Atlanta as I came through, and he became eloquent upon the charms of a country life. He is a business man and a success, but like all men who have worked hard until the silver hairs begin to shine, he is longing for rest and shade and running brooks and meadows and fine cattle and fresh air and gushing springs and latitude and longitude. Said he: "I have lived here on the Peachtree side of Atlanta for nine long years, and my daily walk is from my house to my office, and my office to my house, and I don't know any other street and have not crossed the railroad over to Whitehall for years."

Well, that is a tread mill sort of life, and I couldn't stand it, but he can, for it is habit. I don't believe he would be as happy in any other. Habits are like chains. Habit means a coat—something that gathers around us and holds us; something that controls us. I know a man who for thirty years went every day from his house to his bank, and when a fire destroyed the bank and it was removed to another square, he went over the same old pavement that he so long had trod, although there was a good walk that was a whole block nearer. His habits had possessed him, and he was not happy in any change. That is the main reason why we old folks find fault with new things and new ways, and why we are always harping on the good old times and methods and customs of our fathers. It takes a philosopher's mind to keep up cheerfully with the progress of the age, and to see the good that is in it. I was cheered and comforted at meeting with General Young who has just returned from Russia, and who talks gushingly about the blessings which this free country teems when compared with the hardships and misery that he found in other lands He visited the factories and shops of Russia and Norway and Finland, and saw how the poor people live and with what little they have to be content, and said that if the Knights of Labor could look upon the picture for a day, they would come back and say: "boys, lets go to work and be thankful." There is a great standing army that has to be supported—an army that has to guard thousands of miles of boundary, and all along that boundary you will find a military post and a squad of soldiers but a few miles apart and many of them so near that one can hear the drum-beat of the other. Our own government may come to that, but I am thankful that it will not be in my day, and I hope that its preservation may always be in the love of the people for their rulers and their government. That is a safeguard that is better than guns and professional soldiers, and that costs the country nothing. BILL ARP.

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Young Eddie Reaves, of Athens, Killed While Hunting.

ATHENS, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—Eddie Reaves, aged twelve years, son of Mr. J. H. Reaves, of this city, was shot and killed while hunting near the city. Young Reaves, with his companion, was endeavoring to climb over the fence at the fair grounds when the gun, which had been set down on the ground, went off, firing the loads of both barrels into the head of young Reaves. The load tore away the entire lower part of the face, and the shot lodged in the brain. Death was instantaneous. The body was brought to his father's house in this city, and will be buried tomorrow afternoon from the First Methodist church. There is deep sympathy in the community for the parents.

ANOTHER SIMILAR ACCIDENT.

Today while hunting on Mr. Steven Thomas's place, near the city, Albert Brown, a colored boy, was shot by an accidental discharge of his gun. He had set his piece down on the steps when one barrel was discharged. The load struck him about the ear, but glanced from the skull. The skull is considerably torn, but the wound is not necessarily fatal.

LAYING OF THE CORNERSTONE.

Ceremonies at the Young Men's Christian Association Building.

The preparations for laying the cornerstone of the Young Men's Christian Association building have been completed, and the ceremonies will take place on Tuesday, 26th inst., at 10 o'clock a. m.

The programme has been arranged so as to bring into the ceremonies a number of the most prominent public men in the city. All of them have accepted the duties assigned them, and a number of interesting addresses may be expected. It is hoped that the public will be present in large numbers.

The programme is as follows:

Hymn, The Solid Rock.

Reading Scripture, Rev. W. F. Glenn.

Prayer, Rev. E. H. Barnett.

The Association Building, Hon. Evan P. Howell.

Laying of the corner stone, Atlanta young men.

Prayer, Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D. D.

His Excellency, Governor Henry D. McDaniel.

Chief Justice Judge James Jackson.

His Honor Mayor Geo. Hillyer.

Rev. Henry McDonald, D. D.

Hymn, Doxology.

Benediction, Rev. T. M. Harris.

ATLANTA AS A SOAP CENTER.

Large Quantities of Soap Being Sold by the Atlanta Soap Factory.

The old saying "there is more in the man than there is in the land," has a new illustration in an Atlanta enterprise.

For years Mr. Clifford Neff, of Cincinnati, attempted to make a success of soap manufacturing in Atlanta. A good business man, a cultivated gentleman, with abundant capital, he could not make the enterprise go, and after a long experiment gave it up.

Mr. E. A. Thornton, president of the cotton seed oil mills, had been selling Mr. Neff the "refuse" of his factory. This "refuse" is the vegetable oils and fats that are precipitated from the cotton seed oil in the process of refining. It is the best soap stock known. It brings about three dollars a barrel in Cincinnati, but the barrels, which costs a dollar, and the freight, takes most of the profit. To keep up the home market for his refuse, Mr. Thornton bought the Neff soap factory.

His success has been remarkable. He has been running about five months, and has doubled his capacity every month. Since the first of August, one Atlanta firm, Tanner, Currier & Heath have sold five thousand dollars worth of the "Acme" soap which is his brand. He sold fourteen hundred boxes to Florida last week and eight hundred boxes in one day to Columbia, S. C. This month he is selling at the rate of a hundred thousand dollars a year, and will double his capacity next month. He is working forty hands and expects to increase to one hundred. He said to a CONSTITUTION man:

"There is no better business. If I can sell my soap in Atlanta at the cost of manufacture, the saving in freights between here and Cincinnati gives me all the profit I want. Consequently I undersell all competitors. The Acme soap is the best soap in the market for the simple reason that it is a pure vegetable soap. The refuse of cotton seed oil is the best soap stock. It is purely vegetable and perfectly regular. Other factories which use fats for soap-stock get pure and healthy fat this week and ransid or polluted fats next week. They try to kill the scent and offensiveness with lime, but cannot succeed. Consequently their soap is often filthy, impure and dangerous. I guarantee every cake of Acme to be purely vegetable, and hence perfectly pure. I have never yet sold an order that I did not have it duplicated."

"You are making only laundry soap now?"

"Yes, but I shall add the finer toilet soaps as soon as I get my capacity enlarged. It takes all I can do to fill orders now for Acme. There is no reason why every pound of laundry or toilet soap used in the South Atlantic states could not be manufactured in Atlanta. The advantage we would have in freights over Cincinnati, would give us always enough profit to satisfy any manufacturer. I had some doubts about the experiment until I tried it, but I have established soap manufacturing as a profitable and growing industry in Atlanta."

THE "EMBALMED FOREVER" CROWD

Mr. H. C. Stockdell Makes a Demand for the Author of the Article.

The "Embalmed Forever" article printed in yesterday's CONSTITUTION created no little sensation in Atlanta during the day, and at one time the situation assumed almost a serious character.

Early in the morning Mr. H. C. Stockdell, upon whom the article was most severe, called at the Conflict office with a friend and demanded the name of the author, saying that he would hold the entire establishment responsible unless his demand was complied with. The gentleman in the office informed Mr. Stockdell that he would ascertain the name of the writer and communicate with him later in the day. Not long after Mr. Stockdell's visit to the Conflict office he received the following letter from the business manager of the Conflict:

OFFICE OF THE CONFLICT, Atlanta, October 23, 1886.—Mr H. C. Stockdell, city: Dear Sir—We will cheerfully comply with your request, provided you comply with the usual requisite, and that is, a written statement that you demand the name of the writer for the purpose of legal or other redress.

Very respectfully,

ALEX. C. SMITH,
Business Manager Conflict.

Upon receipt of the letter Mr. Stockdell replied:

ATLANTA, Ga., October 23, 1886.—Alex C. Smith, Manager Conflict—Dear Sir: In reply to yours of this date, I hereby demand the name of your correspondent "W," who wrote the article referred to. I make this demand "for the purpose of legal or other redress."

Yours truly, H. C. STOCKDELL.

Soon after dispatching his reply Mr. Stockdell was called upon by a gentleman from the Conflict office, who informed him that W. G. Whidby, a reporter for the afternoon Journal, had written the communication. At the time Mr. Stockdell received this information the correspondence between him and the Conflict had become known quite extensively and a half dozen newspaper reporters were watching the gentleman to see the result as he had threatened to pull the author's nose. Soon after receiving the information Mr. Stockdell walked out of his office. He looked as serene and happy as ever and as he passed up the street a half dozen reporters were upon his heels. He did not seem to be in a hurry to go anywhere and finally a CONSTITUTION reporter approached him and asked:

"Have you ascertained who wrote that article?"

"Yes, that contemptible puppy, Whidby."

"What are you going to do about it?"

"I have just prepared a card and was on my way to your office to hand it in. I want it printed in the morning. Here it is, and here are the letters which passed between me and the Conflict" answered Mr. Stockdell, handing over an envelope.

Mr. Stockdell in his card says:

ATLANTA, Ga., October 23.—Editors Constitution: In regard to the Conflict article which was reprinted in your issue of today, I will say that I visited the office of the Conflict this morning, accompanied by a friend, and demanded the name of their correspondent "W," who wrote the article in question. Upon receipt of my formal demand for the name of the party, a gentleman connected with the Conflict came to my office and informed me that W. G. Whidby was the author of the article. I stated in the Conflict office that any action I might take in regard to the party who wrote the article, would very largely depend upon who he was. Legal redress is entirely out of the question, and I would not lower myself in the estimation of the good people of Atlanta by making a personal issue with such a man. He is one of those contemptible things that are found floating around in all communities, and is not worthy the name of man, to say nothing of that of a gentleman. I am surprised that any respectable paper would allow their columns to be used by a sneak of his calibre, whose whole aim for the past few months has been to cast reflection upon myself and other members of the board of fire masters, because, for sooth, we saw fit to discharge his brother from the fire department. His brother seems to have taken a sensible view of the matter, and has gone about his business, seeking other employment. Whenever cowards desire to publish articles in newspapers, reflecting upon the character of a gentleman, they always place some signature to it other than their full name, and if this man Whidby had published his name at the bottom of the communication, there would have been no necessity of my paying any attention to it, or him, and I dare say The Conflict would have been ashamed to publish it.

I have no objection to any one reviewing and discussing my record and conduct as an alderman of the city, but in doing so they must stick to the truth. H. C. STOCKDELL.

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

BLUE. RED.

Indications for Atlanta (taken at 1 o'clock, a. m.): Fair weather; warmer in northern portion, nearly stationary temperature in southern portion. For Georgia: Fair weather with easterly winds. For Western Florida and Alabama: Fair weather, easterly winds, nearly stationary temperature. Mississippi: Generally fair weather, southerly winds, nearly stationary temperature. Tennessee and Kentucky: Fair weather, southeasterly winds; slightly warmer.

MR. B. H. RICHARDSON has resigned the management of the Savannah Daily Times.

THE resignation of Mr. S. S. Cox as minister to Turkey has been received at the state department.

GENERAL GORDON made a speech at Ocala, Fla., Thursday night to a large audience who received him with great enthusiasm.

HON. LUCIUS M. LAMAR was yesterday appointed by the president as United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia. This is an important office, and no better selection could have been made.

THE anonymous article from "The Conflict," assailing the character of the six councilmen who voted in the affirmative on the brewery question, and which we reprinted yesterday, was disgraceful in letter and spirit. Such slanderous and wanton assaults injure the cause under cover of which they are written, more than the men at whom they are aimed.

THE action of Hon. John Tyler Cooper in submitting his name, in connection with the mayoralty, to the mass meeting of Tuesday night next is a graceful one. Mr. Cooper's prospects for election in the general race were more than good. But being devoted to organization, and believing in unity of action among his people, he comes forward and lays his chances for election in their hands. His friends will be out in force at the citizens' mass meeting.

THE Macon Telegraph, in attempting to show that the governor did really tamper with Commissioner Heard, crowns its argument with the following triumphant inquiry: "Now, what did Mr. Palmer take Mr Heard down stairs for?" We should not venture to answer this inquiry, except that the Telegraph appears to rest its whole case on the fact that "Mr. Heard was taken down stairs by Mr. Palmer." We violate no confidence when we say that Mr. Palmer took Mr. Heard down stairs because Mr. Heard asked to be taken down stairs. We assure the Telegraph that the request did not involve any treason to the state of Georgia, or anything that threatens the peace and security of the commonwealth.

The Atlanta, Mississippi and Atlantic.

The friends of this proposed road have been busy during the week. The details of the enterprise are being arranged carefully and with deliberation. The feeling in favor of the road increases constantly, and when the subscription lists are opened a great showing will be made at once. Our friends along the line are waking up. The people of Eatonton may be relied on for $50,000, Waynesboro for $75,000. Sheffield has subscribed, as a corporation, $25,000, and will add as much more by private subscription, And so all along the line.

Atlanta must subscribe $500,000. When she does this, the road will be certainly built, and will be controlled by Atlanta.

The Congressional Election.

One week from next Tuesday the voters of the United States will elect representatives in the fiftieth congress. A quieter congressional campaign has never been known. It has slipped almost upon us with hardly a token of its approach save in a few communities which have been agitated by sharp contests of a local character.

Nobody but a few wild republican editors and the little clerks of the republican campaign committee appears to be in any doubt as to the result. The democrats have a majority of forty-five in the present house of representatives. They are certain to have a majority in the next house. Though it may be somewhat smaller, it will hardly fall below thirty. In Georgia the democrats have the clearest field they have ever known. In only one district is there a semblance of opposition to the regularly nominated candidate, and there the so called opposition is a farce.

In the first district ex-Senator Norwood has been nominated for a second term in the house.

In the second district Mr. Henry G. Turner has been indorsed for fourth term.

Judge Crisp is to be returned by the voters of the third district for the third time.

In the fourth district Mr. Thomas W. Grimes, of Muscogee, is to be called to congressional honors. A Mr. Carmichael, of Coweta county, is running on some sort of a nebulous platform against Mr. Grimes, but this fact is hardly known outside of Mr. Carmichael's bailiwick.

Judge John D. Stewart is to succeed Colonel N. J. Hammond, who is serving his fourth term as congressman from the fifth district.

Mr. Blount will go in again from the sixth district, which will give him sixteen years in the house, and will make him the oldest member of that body in point of continuous service, except Messrs. Randall, Kelley and O'Neill, of Pennsylvania, Judge Holman, of Indiana, and Mr. Mills, of Texas.

Mr. J. C. Clements has a walk over for a fourth term in the seventh district.

In the eighth Dr. Henry Carlton, of Clarke, is to be transferred from the state senate to succeed Mr. Reese in congress.

Colonel Allen D. Candler will represent the "mountain boys" of the ninth for the third time.

The tenth will give a unanimous indorsement of Colonel George T. Barnes, and try him for a second term.

Although the democratic nominees have succeeded in scaring off opposition, they ought to receive a full vote next Tuesday week. It is a good thing to keep up the habit of voting for the democratic nominees, and in every district a man worthy the full suffrage of the people is presented. Georgia should give the ten democrats who are to represent her in the popular branch of the next congress a good send off on Tuesday, November 2nd. Vote!

The Workingman Who Don't Work.

About the worst fellow in the world is the workingman who does not work. The "professional" workingman who hangs about the street corners and whispers, conspires and agitates.

Usually he is a tramp, without property or local interest, ready to skip out when the picking grows scant. He thrives by disorder and fattens when the real workingmen are starving. His opportunity is a strike or a riot, and he busily sows the seed of discontent. When elections come along he "sells" the votes of the workingmen who would kick him out of the town if they suspected it, and, pocketing the money of his purchaser, of course, fails to deliver the vote. He is despised equally by the man who buys him and by the men whose votes he pretends to sell. These fellows never last long. As soon as they are found out they are kicked out. Then they pack their carpetbags and try the next town.

The real workingman has the sympathy and respect of all good people. The man who stands in the light of his forge—who earns in the sweat of his brow his sweet and honest bread—whose strong arms shove the plane or wield the hammer—this man is the sinew of the land and its strength. He can find no safer adviser than his own clear brain that by the side of his bench or in his shop patiently works out its problems—and no safer influence than the wife and children that cluster about his hearthstone. It is a sad day for him when he yields to the soft-handed idler that plots only to fuddle his brain and give his wife and children over to want and starvation. The workingman who does not work is a bad egg, and the workingman who does work will do well to fight shy of him.

Atlanta and the New School.

We regret to see the Athens Banner arguing against the constitutionality of the act establishing the technological school. The Banner says it will give the school its support, but that the school is clearly outside the law, and that its establishment elsewhere than at Athens is a fatal mistake.

The Banner is wrong! The legislature never intended the school to go to Athens. The senate voted down Senator Carlton's substitute which practically forced it to Athens, and then by a vote of 27 to 13, passed the bill which left the question of location open. The bill is constitutional. It is so pronounced by the authorities, and it will stand. The school will be built, it will be supported and it will be a success.

The Banner goes on to say: "The technological trustees have chosen their field and must make their fight for Atlanta. That they have alienated a large part of university support, we have no doubt." We respectfully submit this is hardly fair, coming from Athens, to a city which sends more students to the university than any five cities in the state, and that has more than fifty of her sons and daughters at the university or institute. As far as "alienating a large part of the university support" is concerned, we remind our contemporary in all sincerity and candor that the university needs friends and support quite as much as the technological school does. The university has had no warmer or more earnest supporters than the men who are friends of the technological school, and the city of Atlanta itself. In season and out of season this city and these friends have stood by the university. It will be unfortunate in more quarters than one if the "alienation" the Banner speaks of should really exist and should make itself manifest. The school and the university can help each other. The friends of both can stand together and accomplish a great deal for higher education in Georgia. The man who forces them into antagonism is very unwise or worse. Chancellor Mell, of the university, has none of this spirit. He favored the university from higher motives, but now gives the school his best wishes. Commissioner Hodgson has no such feeling. His fight for Athens was made with strength and dignity and honored him in the eyes of his colleagues. Why should any one else keep up the excitement when the fight is over?

The Banner, after reading Commissioner Harris a lesson, in which he is eloquently referred to in the past tense as a man who had been wise, says: "We have said this more in sorrow than in anger." This is amazing. We pass over the burning of Mr. Heard in effigy, for we take it for granted the Banner does not indorse, though it has not condemned, that absurd feat. But why should it write this way of Mr. Harris, or of any other commissioner? The commissioners were under oath, and did what they thought best. It is clear now that neither Athens or Macon would ever have been chosen. Mr. Heard was positive that Athens ought not to have the school and he would never have voted to put it there. The one time he voted for Athens Mr. Harris had already voted for Macon, and it was a mere compliment. We have the best reason for saying that Mr. Harris did not favor Athens and would not have voted to put it there. At the most Athens would never have had but two votes. Mr. Hodgson would never have voted for Macon. Mr. Porter and Mr. Inman were firm for Atlanta. Macon could never have secured but two votes. When Mr. Porter, who had no local choice, selected Atlanta, the final choice of this city was inevitable. No commissioner is to blame. There is no blame about it. Atlanta made the best bid, offered the best advantages and got the school. As Mr. Harris said, the moment Atlanta's liberal bid was announced that moment it was clear that she would get the school.

The Banner is mistaken in saying that few people outside of Atlanta believe the commission has acted wisely. The vast majority of the people preferred Atlanta as the home of the school, and this fact will abundantly appear. It is fashionable for a few fellows to abuse Atlanta, but whenever the people get a chance to speak they invariably stand up to their capital city. Before the fight Atlanta is always whipped, as in this case, but when the decision of the people is rendered, Atlanta comes out right side up. The technological school will be a success, we earnestly hope, with the support of our friends in Athens; but if not, then it will be a success in spite of them. We earnestly desire peace and co-operation. If we cannot get these, we will try and be ready for whatever comes along.

New York's Next Mayor.

If there is anything in present indications, Henry George will have all his trouble for nothing. So long as he addressed the public in an occasional book or lecture, he posed as a philosopher; but the excitement of the campaign has caused him to flame out as a blatant demagogue. The better elements of the working classes regard Mr. George's candidacy as a menace to law and order, and view with disfavor his theories of social reforms.

The standard bearer of the republicans, Theodore Roosevelt, is a typical nice young man. He is so aggressively nice that Roscoe Conkling once alluded to him as "that dentificial young man with more teeth than brain." Just such mots have killed very clever men, and Roosevelt finds himself the object of good humored banter. His friends feel that he is a lamb being led to the slaughter.

Mr. Hewitt, then is the coming man. It is believed that his majority will be overwhelming. Good men of all parties are working for him in the hope that his election will squelch socialism and rebuke the hollow pretensions of the republicans. When it comes to friendship for the workingman Mr. Hewitt has a record that inspires confidence. He is an honest, sensible reformer, with no nonsense about him. While he is the poor man's friend, he is not the rich man's enemy. Both classes trust him. That he will triumph over the boodlers and cranks who oppose him is a foregone conclusion, as matters now stand.

"Science" and Common Sense.

The Boston Herald is inclined to criticize Dr. Talmage for making "attacks" on modern science so called, and on the positions of Mr. Herbert Spencer, Dr. Huxley and others. Our contemporary thinks that, in order to criticize the works and theories of a scientific man, it is necessary that the critic should have something more than a barely superficial knowledge of scientific thought. It is to be feared, however, that this dictum of the Herald would lead it into deep water. In the first place, the Herald would find it difficult to define what it means by "scientific thought." There have been very stubborn fights over a much smaller matter than this, and our Boston contemporary would be astonished to find that a definition satisfactory to one scientific man, would be promptly rejected and repudiated by another.

The Herald is also mistaken in supposing that Spencer and Huxley are not propagandists. They not only seek to impress the public with their views, but they are not averse to engaging in controversies the personal bitterness of which is but thinly veiled. A great deal is said about science now-a-days, and a great many limping things strive to hide themselves behind so-called "scientific thought."

The truth is that much of the thought that passes as scientific, is anything else. Ex-Judge Stallo, in his admirable work, "The Concepts of Modern Philosophy"—a work that cannot be too often consulted by those who desire to inform themselves in regard to the conclusions of the scientific thinkers—shows that the scientific men of the day are not only at war with each other, but with themselves; and if this is the case, even Dr. Talmage may be permitted to deal with them as his common sense may dictate.

Mr. Spencer seeks to prove that the God of the Bible is a myth. This is his theory, and it is a theory that is not helped by his voluminous arguments. Mr. Huxley is at home when dissecting a crawfish, but when he seeks to prove that matter is its own motor, so to speak, his argument cannot be classed among the "scientific thought" of the day, unless this term is to cover the loose fragments and frayed ends of impossible, impracticable and unprovable theories. One grain of common sense is worth a ton of "scientific thought."

Silly Speculations.

The failure of Mrs. Cleveland to accompany the president to Richmond has started a lot of foolish gossip.

The change of programme is attributed by some to the disinclination of the president and his wife to meet socially and on a public occasion the daughter of Jefferson Davis, who is a guest of Governor Lee.

Of course this is too absurd for anything. The president has never been accused of a lack of backbone. He has friends among ex-confederates, and has taken them into his cabinet. As he did not visit Richmond on a political mission or on an occasion that was connected with politics, it never entered his head that meeting the daughter of Mr. Davis could be construed into a political offense.

But the story is too ridiculous for serious consideration.

Literary Reforms.

In the current issue of Harper's Magazine, Mr. George Parsons Lathrop has an article on "The Literary Movement in New York." This article is not only pleasantly and judiciously written, but is embellished with numerous portraits of writers who are well known to the public. Mr. Lathrop's article and its illustrations tend to put the public on a more intimate footing with the metropolitan literary men than it has heretofore been, and for that reason it may be said to possess more than ordinary interest; but we search through it in vain for any justification of its title. New York, as the center of the publishing trade, has drawn to itself a number of poets, novelists and other literary men, and these have formed an author's club; but, so far as we can see, there is no sign of any literary movement beyond the general facts of residence and employment. Nor is there any sign of it in Mr. Lathrop's article, and we may be sure that if there was any special literary movement in his vicinity, it would not escape the eye of so keen an observer.

There are at present but two literary movements in this country worth considering. One appears to be confined to the south. It has developed such writers as Thomas Nelson Page, Charles Egbert Craddock, Cable and others not as well known. The experiments which mark this literary movement in the south have been very successful.

The other literary movement, which seems to be almost as important, appears to be in the nature of a protest against the Miss Nancyism which prevails in a certain school of American novelists. The protest, curiously enough, takes the shape of a demand on the part of the public for Russian literature. In response to this demand, a perfect stream of Russian novels and stories is pouring from the press, and hardly a week passes that new translations are not announced. This Russian literature is coarse and crude, but it is simple, sincere and sympathetic. It deals with life not from the side of so-called culture, but from the side of human nature itself. In the very nature of things, there is, for an American reader, more real interest in a half-clad Russian peasant, with an unpronounceable name, but with human passions raging in his breast, than there is in a Yankee elevator boy who is not only a sneak by habit, but whose nature is hopelessly and helplessly commonplace.

The southern literary movement, we are sure, will lead to large and satisfactory results, and it is to be hoped that the protest against Miss Nancyism, is American literature, will be pushed steadily in the direction of reform.

Bessemer and His Bonanza.

What is Bessemer steel?

Our newspapers are full of it, and people have a vague idea that its manufacture will do as much as any other one thing to enrich the south.

Yet very few of our readers know anything about Bessemer, and fewer still know how his wonderful steel is made, and how the process by which it is manufactured was discovered.

Sir Henry Bessemer is an English inventor of French descent. His greatest success came to him late in life. He was experimenting with metals with a view to securing a stronger material for guns. Knowing nothing of metallurgy he visited various iron works, seeking for ductile malleable cast steel. He set up his crucibles and worked industriously, but at first without result. One day while on a sick bed his great idea came to him. Why not try the effect of a cold air blast through the bottom of the vessel filled with the molten mass? He shook off his illness, pulled himself together, and proceeded to carry out his idea. A suitable vessel with pipes was constructed, with an engine for blowing a strong blast of air through the bottom of the crucible. The dissolved metal was poured in, and the air blast was turned on. Such a fiery fury and infernal glory as had never been seen instantly blazed out of the pot. Gradually the dazzling corruscations subsided. The glowing mass had received a new spirit from the air, and when it quietly sank to rest it was transformed into steel.

This discovery reduced the price of steel one-half. Bessemer at once took his place among the greatest men of the age, and wealth rolled in upon him from every quarter. The name of this man will soon be a household word in the iron fields of the south, and the utilization of his simple magic will make our iron and steel kings the richest in the world.

The B'nai B'rith Asylum.

The orphan asylum of the order of B'nai B'rith, which, it is proposed to establish in Atlanta, will be a beneficence to the South Atlantic states. There are but two cities competing for the asylum, Washington, D. C., and Atlanta, Ga. It will be vastly better for all the people of Georgia and the Carolinas to have the asylum in this city, than in Washington.

The gentlemen who represent Atlanta in this competition want $35,000 from the state of Georgia. Atlanta has subscribed $20,000 of this amount. The other towns and cities will surely give the $15,000 that is needed. It is to the honor of the Jews that they rise above small local prejudices, and that the great heart of their race beats stronger than any mere local feeling. We feel sure that the gentlemen who go out today to get the subscription of the Jews in other towns and cities, will find their brethren ready and liberal. We can assure all concerned, that the asylum will be set upon a hill when it is placed in Atlanta, and that all classes of our people will unite in its support. We shall look for good reports from the liberal hearted Hebrews of Macon, Savannah, Albany, and other points.

COLONEL JOHN PAUL BOCOCK, of the Philadelphia News, writes poetry under the nom d'occur of "Dora Shaw."

CHICAGO paragraphs about the sultan of Morocco have supplanted allusions to the Afghan boundary question.

REV. WILLIAM J. SHERMAN, the Catholic priest who recently broke his vows by getting married to a Brooklyn girl, is in trouble again. He has been arrested on a charge preferred by a womrn named Julia Mulvaney, aged twenty-seven, who swears that the priest fooled her by a mock marriage some time ago. She says she used to go to the priest's house, before his marriage, and that the priest's conduct was anything but right. One day he ran his hands over her face, mumbled some Latin, which she did not understand, and then declared: "Now, we are married." After that she thought she was the priest's wife, and shielded him until his marriage to Tilly McCoy several months ago. The ex-priest when arrested spent one night in jail, but has been released on bond. He says he is innocent and that the charge against him is made merely because he is "down in the world."

EBER MORRISON is supposed to be patching up another tariff bill. Well, Mr. Randall must have something to amuse him.

THE water-meter system appears to be a great friend to the dust. People are now afraid to sprinkle the streets in front of their houses. Atlanta must have new railroads and new industries; and she must get rid of the water-meter system.

E. C. WALKER, the Valley Falls, Kansas, man who "married" Lillian Harman according to the Free Love idea, still contributes to Lucifer, the Free Love organ, dating his letters "Cell No. 2, Oskaloosa jail." The arrest of the pair has stirred the Free Lovists to a high pitch of excitement, and they are making their press fairly buzz. Cell No. 2 is a very good place for keeping E. C. Walker until the machinery of the law can transfer him to a well guarded penitentiary.

PHILADELPHIA men are invariably swindled when they go to New York. They seem to have implicit faith in the bunco men.

THE Courier Journal is fooling itself with the belief that the "tariff traitors" have been weeded out of the democratic party in congress.

PERSONS AND THINGS.

MR. D. L. MOODY, the evangelist, is meditating another religious campaign in the south.

THE report that Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll was dying grew out of a painful but not a dangerous affection of the throat, that is confining him to his home. There is a tumor on one of the cords of the throat, and an operation will probably have to be resorted to.

BENJAMIN CLEVELAND, a cousin of the president, was married last Wednesday evening at Jersey City Heights to Miss Emma Coe.

YOUNG Mr. Blaine's father-in-law, Colonel Nevins, of Ohio, is a printer by trade and formerly held a position at the capital. In his younger days Colonel Nevins was a suitor for the hand of Miss Kate Chase before she went to Washington with her father and met the young war governor of Rhode Island, to whom she gave her hand.

GRIDDLE cakes are to come conspicuously to the front this winter and it is going to be quite the proper thing—so a lady prominent in society avers—for the fashionable young woman to boast of her achievements in this line. Griddle cake parties are predicted.

A BOSTON Post writer met Joseph Cook, the abstruse theologian, the other day. Mr. Cook was dressed in solemn black and had a bag in his hand, and a long gap between the bottom of his trousers and the tops of his shoes displayed a gaudy expanse of red stockings.

FREDERICK A. GOWER, formerly of Providence, is living in retirement in India. It has been supposed for more than a year that he was lost from a balloon in which he made an ascension from Dieppe, France, but this is now contradicted. He was prominent for several years as the introducer of the Bell telephone in France, and as the husband of Lilian Norton, the prima donna.

THE Brooklyn Magazine voices the opinion on young men of the present. "The young man of today is not, to our mind, what he should or might be. There is a tendency to look too lightly upon the practical things of life, and to pay too much attention to things that are interesting in themselves, but that serve as poor foundation stones upon which to build a successful career."

AT a reception given to the Taylor brothers in Gallatin on Tuesday, three cakes on the banquet board attracted general attention. One, which was the central ornament of the table, was the figure of a man fiddling and around the borders was the inscription: "The Mountain Fiddler Will Win." Another was fringed with white ornaments and on it was the inscription: "The Next Governor." And still another was trimmed with red, Alf's color, and on it were the words: "The Next Governor's Brother."

ECHOES FROM THE PEOPLE.

Reading on the Farm.

Reader, Douglassville, Ga.: I am a farmer and my education has been neglected. I have a great desire to read good books, but have no time. What can a man under such circumstances do in the way of self-culture?

Thousands of farmers could read fifty pages, as books go, each day. This amounts to 18,250 pages a year, or thirty-six volumes of 500 pages each. In this way all the masters in literature can be read in a life-time. If you cannot read fifty, read twenty-five, but read some at any cost. An hour per day would send you through six hundred volumes in twenty years. Think for a moment of the history, travel, biography, science, poetry and general literature comprised in that number of volumes.

Mephistopheles.

Subscriber, Murphy, N. C.: Who was Mephistopheles?

In the old demonology Mephistopheles was the second in power to the fallen arch-angels to satan. There are seven chief devils, according to old belief. Goethe's "Faust" has led many into the error of thinking of Mephistopheles as Satan, whereas he is only second in the infernal regions.

The Maine Liquor Law.

H. J. R., Oxford, Miss.: Please give me a synopsis of the prohibition law in Maine.

The first prohibitory law was passed by the legislature of Maine in 1846, but after five years' time it was found defective, and was revised and amended at the session of 1851. In this form it became known as the "Maine law." The central idea of this statute is to break up the traffic in alcoholic liquors as beverages, and the public or private sale of everything coming within this category is prohibited except as specially provided for. Provision is made for the sale of alcohol and alcoholic liquors by municipal officers appointed for this special purpose, and paid fixed salaries for conducting the business under specific limitations. No liquors can be sold except for medicinal purposes and upon prescriptions properly given, and each sale is entered upon a public record. Provision is also made for searching the premises where the illicit traffic is suspected to be carried on, and the seizure of all liquors there found. Cider is excepted from the provisions of the Maine law.

When Shall He Be Inaugurated?

The date of General Gordon's inauguration may become a very important detail.

It has been stated by the gentlemen in charge of the military ceremonies that it will take place on the Friday following the meeting of the legislature. It is a question if this will not be illegal. The legislature meets on Wednesday, and it is held that the code requires that the inauguration shall take place during the same week. We quote from the code:

Section 49 of the code says: "The ceremony of inauguration shall take place during the first week of the session of the general assembly next after the election; and on such day of that week as the general assembly, by joint resolution, appoints. On failure of appointment, it takes place at 12 o'clock meridian, on Saturday of that week, unless prevented by providential causes."

Of course those who name the Tuesday following for inauguration day, hold that "within the week" means within seven days after the legislature meets. Governor Stephens and Governor McDaniel held differently and were inaugurated within the week of the meeting of the legislature. Governor Colquitt took the same view his first term, but the last time was inaugurated on the Tuesday following. This was held to be unimportant as he was already governor and was simply to be reinaugurated. Apropos of this the supreme court of the United States in the 4th Peters report, page 361, defines a week to be "a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday."

Attorney-General Anderson has been consulted in the matter and gives his opinion that the inauguration on the Tuesday after the Wednesday that the Legislature meets is perfectly constitutional, being within the first week's session of the legislature. This seems to settle the question.

THE ENGINEERS.

Their Twenty-Third Annual Convention in New York.

NEW YORK, October 23.—[Special Correspondence.]—The opening session of the twenty-third annual convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at the Metropolitan opera house yesterday, was of very great interest. The delegates and their wives filled the body of the magnificent hall, while the stage was occupied by Grand Chief Engineer P. M. Arthur, Chairman W. H. Gurney, Mayor Grace, Governor Leon Abbett, of New Jersey, President Chauncey M. DePew, of the New York Central railroad, Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, Mr. Delos Everett, Mr. T. S. Ingraham, First Grand Engineer H. Hays, First Grand Assistant Engineer J. Romaine Brown, and Mr. G. H. Van Tassell. Cappa's Seventh regiment band enlivened the proceedings with splendid music.

Addresses were delivered by Chairman Gurney, Mayor Grace, Governor Abbett, Dr. Talmage, Chief Arthur, and President DePew. In concluding his address the last mentioned said:

"I extend to you a cordial welcome to the metropolis. I am glad you have brought Betsy and the baby with you, and hope you will have every thing here to your enjoyment and satisfaction. If there is anything lacking send word to the Grand Central depot, and if it is in our power we will supply you. I hope that the recollection of the convention in New York of 1886 will be a pleasant one which will last you all through life."

The delegates have made a fine impression. Those from Atlanta are in good health and are enjoying themselves.

A great deal of important business will be transacted. TOM SHIVERS.

The News from Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn, October 23.—[Special.]—The entire city is excited over the custom house location, and speculation is rife as to the result of the government agent's visit.

Robert Kyle was today found guilty of five robberies and sentenced to the penitentiary for eleven and a half years.

Active steps are being taken looking to the immediate building of the Lookout mountain waterworks, and to bring the water from the cave in the mountain into the city. Philadelphia capitalists are at the head of the company. The pipes will be laid in ninety days.

Pencil Paragraphs and Editorial Shortstops Caught on the Run.

Mr. C. A. Collier, just returned from Tennessee, says: "I met Frank Potts in Chattanooga, and he says he is afraid the prohibitionists will drive him out of Tennessee. The fight there is to get the legislature to submit to the people whether or not the sale of liquor shall be prohibited in the state. If it is submitted, the people will vote it out by 50,000 to 75,000 majority. The 'submissionists' control the lower house by a big majority, and the control of the senate hangs on two or three districts. One of these is the Nashville district, where the fight is tremendous. Sam Jones' ... was in use there by the prohibitionists and ... burned the other night. Colonel Cole says the submissionists will carry the senate overwhelmingly, as well as the house; that the question will be submitted and liquor voted out of the state by an unprecedented majority."

Hon. C. A. Turner, of Monroe county, who has been a prominent candidate for the judgeship of the Flint circuit, with strong chances of success, has publicly withdrawn from the race. Mr. Turner was a student at the State university and was a few years ago a member of the house of representatives and made a fine reputation during that session. He is one of Georgia's foremost young lawyers and would have called to his support a troop of active and influential friends. His withdrawal leaves the field entirely to ex-Governor James S. Boynton, who at present is the sitting judge. Mr. Turner will go actively into the ministry of the Baptist denomination. He will be a brilliant and useful member of the sacred calling to which he intends to devote his talents.

A man who was a leader in the fight for the local option bill in the last house, and who will be in the new senate, was in the city yesterday. Very naturally the local option bill came up for discussion.

"I do not think," he said, "that there will be any change in the law. It is claimed by many that certain parts of the bill were put on to kill the measure, and that they ought to be stricken off. I have studied the bill very closely both during the debates in the legislature and since, and I confess I do not know what provisions, if any, were put on by the enemies of the bill in the hope that they would disgust the legislature and defeat the measure. That is a question which neither the friends nor the enemies of the bill have agreed on. Neither side has agreed as to what the objectionable features are. I do not think a general law will be passed at this session."

"How will the present assembly stand on the temperance question?"

"The senate will stand about like it did before, but I can't tell about the house. There are only about twenty-five of the old members in the present house, and I have no idea how the new ones will vote on temperance questions."

Here is a story about Bill Arp. Perhaps it is new to some if not to all.

Years ago a certain judge was a candidate for governor, and in making a public speech, remarked: "Gentlemen, the office of governor has been pursuing me for years!"

Instantly William was on his feet, asking to be allowed a question. The judge declined to be interrupted.

"All right," said William, with a shrug; "if you won't answer a question for one, these folks are going to vote for you, that's certain."

"Well, go on then, and ask your question," replied the judge, snappishly.

William arose.

"You say," he observed, "that the office of governor has been pursuing you for years?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, sir," said Arp solemnly, "all I've got to say is that you are gaining on it!"

As the office has not yet overtaken the judge it is presumed that he continued to gain on it.

"I predict," said a friend of mine yesterday—

"An earthquake?" I asked.

"No; I am a railroad Wiggins. I predict a regular hair raising advancement in railroad train making. I predict that in the next twenty-five years the people of the United States will see trains make a speed of a hundred and fifty miles an hour. My idea is this: The railroad of today is too small an affair; it is too crooked and too insignificant. Take points like Chicago and New York. An ordinary railroad is too small an affair to do the business. Let a mint of capital build a road as straight as the crow travels, from New York to Chicago. Let it go right straight through regardless of hills, mountains and valleys. Build the track, say fifteen feet wide. Let the rails be big—well, as big around as a sea serpent for instance. Then build an engine with drivers ... feet high, everything heavy and strong in proportion. I mean build a great big railroad, as much ahead of the present roads as the present roads are ahead of stage coaches. Steam up your engine, pull the throttle wide open and let her go! Give her a straight track, clear the deck and I'll bet she'd—well—I'll bet she would make the fastest time of today ashamed of itself. Mark me—what can be, and is needed, will be."

Yesterday morning I was passing a row of old residences when my attention was drawn to three boys scuffling on the sidewalk. They were apparently less than ten years old. Two were ragged negro boys, while one—the youngest—would have been white if he had been subjected to a dozen or so Turkish baths. At a glance I took in the situation. The white boy had been into one of the houses and had begged a double handful of bread, and the three were trying to divide the pile into "three halves." I never saw dogs fight so for breakfast. One boy would snatch another's bread and bite a big mouthful, only to have his own snatched away the next instant. The white boy seemed to think he was entitled to the lion's share, but as he was the youngest and weakest of the three he probably did not get it. I did not wait to see.

Miss Orelia Key Bell, of Atlanta, has written a beautiful poem, which has been set to music by Mr. Edward Von Adelung, of Boston. The music suits the words exactly. The air is a pleading passionate prayer, that goes straight to the heart and sings itself in one's memory. The wooing music is beyond words to describe and when it is joined to the sweet love words of the song it is simply not to be resisted by any girl with a heart in her bosom. I give the words below:

"In no sadder strain than these
Lugubrious minor keys,
The bul-bul wooes the climbing rose,
O sweet!

Yet still to my soft pleading
Thou turn'st an ear unheeding,
And wonder'st why
Pride lets me linger
At thy feet, sweetheart.

Ah! would for one fleet hour
I were the climbing flower
And thou the bul-bul perched upon my stem
In order thou might'st see
How sweeter 'tis to be
Kissing Love's feet
Than crowned with pride's cold diadem, sweetheart.

Sweetheart! Sweetheart!
Why avert those perfect eyes?
Sweetheart! Sweetheart!
Take me into Paradise.

The song is published by S. T. Gordon & Son, New York, but it is for sale by all music dealers. The name of the piece is "Persian Serenade."

Harrell Should be Looked After.

From the Washington, Ga., Gazette.

We see that the gentleman from Webster says he is going to smash the whole thing as soon as the legislature meets. This member must be looked after early in the session and put where he will do the least harm. We don't believe he can stampede the legislature on the question at this stage of the effort to establish the school.

Striking for Their Pay.

PORTSMOUTH, O., October 23.—Sixty Italian laborers on new Southside railroad across the river in Kentucky, struck for last month's pay. To-day, armed with knives and revolvers, they compelled all other laborers to cease work. Fifteen of them have been arrested, but further trouble is feared.

d and fifty miles an hour. My son is this: The railroad of today is too small an air. It is too crooked and too insignificant.
e points like Chicago and New York. An or ary railroad is too small an affair to do the busi ss. Let a mint of capital build a road as ight as the crow travels, from New York to icago. Let it go right straight through regard s of hills, mountains and valleys. Build it , say fifteen feet wide. Let the rails be as g—well, as big around as a sea ent for stance. Then build an engine with drivers ten et high, everything heavy and strong in propor on. I mean build a great big railroad, as much ead of the present roads as the present roads re ahead of stage coaches. Steam up your big gine, pull the throttle wide open and let her . Give her a straight track, clear the deck and bet she'd—well—I'll bet she would ake the fastest time of today ashamed of itself.
k me—what can be, and is needed, will be.

esterday morning I was passing a row of negro esidences when my attention was drawn to three oys scuffling on the sidewalk. They were appar ently less than ten years old. Two were ragged egro boys, while one—the youngest—would have en white if he had been subjected to a dozen or Turkish baths. At a glance I took in the situa on. The white boy had been into one of the ouses and had begged a double handful of bread, nd the three were trying to divide the pile into three halves." I never saw dogs fight so for breakfast. One boy would snatch another's bread nd bite a big mouthful, only to have his own natched away the next instant. The white boy eemed to think he was entitled to the lion's hare, but as he was the youngest and weakest of the three he probably did not get it. I did not ait to see.

Miss Orelia Key Bell, of Atlanta, has written a eautiful poem, which has been set to music by
r. Edward Von Adelung, of Boston. The music its the words exactly. The air is a pleading assionate prayer, that goes straight to the heart nd sings itself in one's memory.
he wooing music is beyond words
o describe and when it is joined to the sweet love ords of the song it is simply not to be resisted by ny girl with a heart in her bosom. I give the ords below:

"In no sadder strain than these
Lugubrious minor keys,
The bul-bul woos the climbing rose,
O sweet!

Yet still to my soft pleading
Thou turn'st an ear unheeding,
And wonder'st why
Pride lets me linger
At thy feet, sweetheart.

Ah! would for one fleet hour
I were the climbing flower
And thou the bul-bul perched upon my stem!
In order thou might'st see
How sweeter 'tis to be
Kissing Love's feet
Than crowned with pride's cold diadem, sweet heart.

Sweetheart! Sweetheart!
Why avert those perfect eyes?
Sweetheart! Sweetheart!
Take me into Paradise.

The song is published by S. T. Gordon & Son,
New York, but it is for sale by all music dealers.
The name of the piece is "Persian Serenade."

Harrell Should be Looked After.

From the Washington, Ga., Gazette.

We see that the gentleman from Webster says he is going to smash the whole thing as soon as the legislature meets. This member must be looked after early in the session and put where he will do the least harm. We don't believe he can stampede the legislature on the question at this stage of the effort to establish the school.

Striking for Their Pay.

PORTSMOUTH, O., October 23.—Sixty Italian laborers on new Southside railroad across the river in Kentucky, struck for last month's pay. To-day armed with knives and revolvers, they compelled all other laborers to cease work. Fifteen of the have been arrested, but further trouble is feared.

RAOUL'S REPORT

OF THE CONDITION OF THE CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Everything in a Flourishing Condition—Three Hundred Thousand Dollars' Increase in Net Earnings Over the Previous Year—The Advance in Stock—Other News.

SAVANNAH, Ga., October 23.—[Special.]—The report of President Raoul, of the Central railroad, has excited very general comment, and has had a buoyant effect on stock. The condition of the property is shown to be in a very flourishing condition, the total net earnings for the year being $1,994,912 81, being $295,150.30 in excess of the previous year. The president says this increase would have warranted, and a larger dividend would have been declared, but for the unavoidable concentration in this year's operations of the large amount of charges of an extraordinary character, as shown in the foregoing statement of disbursements, and the undue estimate made for the earnings of three months succeeding the declaration of the dividend. Stocks went up one point and is very stiff, with good demand. The president further says:

"At the writing of the last report the hope was entertained that the Georgia railroad would, in the near future, sufficiently increase its earnings to justify the retention of the balance against it on the books as a solvent asset, but the failure to earn that portion of rental for which the company is responsible, for the year closing March 31st, by $44,814 86, prompts the more peculiant policy of the charging of the old balance to profit and loss and, beginning with this year, include any losses or gains that may hereafter occur in the annual account of earnings and expenses. Up to this date its business exhibits an improvement for the present fiscal year as compared with the same months of the preceeding year. The net earnings are practically the same as the year preceeding. The determination of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf company to extend its road eastward from Memphis to Birmingham, decided the company carrying out its original plan of extension in the purchase of the Columbus and Western and build to Birmingham to meet the Kansas City. An engineer corps is now in the field locating the undetermined portion of the road and the construction of that portion immediately beyond Goodwater, already located and practically graded, has been commenced. It is hoped to have the road completed to Birmingham in about one year from this time. This connection with Kansas City, the center of the most important producing region of the northwest, not only opens to this section of the country traversed by the company's existing lines the cheapest channel through which to draw its products, but also affords the shortest mileage route from that same region to New York and other eastern cities. It is confidentived belief that an improvement in revenues of railroads and steamship property will follow close upon the completion of this connection. Recognizing its importance it is proposed to build and equip the line in a thorough manner.

"The net earnings of the Montgomery and Eufaula railroad have slightly increased over the preceding year, and, as shown by the tabulated statement, is $46,862.26, which is equivalent to its fixed charges, and about six and a half per cent on its capital stock.

"The net earnings for the Eufaula and Clayton railroad for the past year, amounted to $17,821, which is about forty-seven per cent on its nominal capital stock, $100,000, and about one and a half per cent on the capital it would take to construct the road.

"The operations of the Ocean Steamship company have been increased over last year.

"A lease of the Mobile and Girard railroad was consummated for the period of ninety-nine years from June 1. The leading conditions are that the company is to pay this interest on its bonded debt now amounting to $208,000 and permit no increase of the same and $150 per share upon the capital stock then outstanding. The capital stock consists of 12,684 shares of stock at a par value of $100 per share, of which the company owns 4,455 shares. As the road has been operated for many years past in friendly co-operation with the company, and the company is already an indorser upon its outstanding bonds, the change is to a certain extent nominal. The road has met its interest for several years and is now in excellent condition, and little doubt is entertained that economy is to be secured by operating it under its lease, and thus dispensing with some of the expense of the separate organizations, will enable it to meet this slight additional obligation. The lease obviates the possibility of the road being operated otherwise than as a feeder to the Central.

"It was deemed advisable to render financial assistance to parties constructing roads in upper South Carolina, reaching the Spartanburg, Greenville and Anderson and connecting with the Augusta and Knoxville railroad, as they would, under a management working in harmony with the company, become very important contributors to the tonnage of both its roads and ships. The money required to render this aid was partly secured by the sale of some securities held in treasury and not needed for the control of other property, and partly by temporarily loans. Arrangements have been effected to continue the indebtedness thus contracted in its present shape till it can be funded in the securities of the new companies, which will be consummated at no distant day. To accomplish this, and to meet the expense of change of gauge, without encroaching upon the net earnings, involved an increase of the floating debt, which, though large, is amply protected by additional property with this satisfactory plans in view for funding the entire debt in securities of self-sustaining property.

The People of Cedartown Interested in the Road.

The interest which the Atlanta, Mississippi and Atlantic railroad excites in the town through which it may pass, may be judged of by the following letter:

CEDARTOWN, Ga., October 23d, 1886.—Colonel Evan P. Howell, chairman of the Atlanta, Mississippi and Atlantic Railroad Committee—Dear Sir: At a meeting Tuesday evening of the citizens' cooperative association of Cedartown, the undersigned were named as a committee to address you this letter in regard to the grand railroad enterprise you and the gentlemen of your committee have committed to your charge by the wide awake citizens of your great and prosperous city. Our association, indeed the entire citizenship of our growing town and of Polk county, hail with delight the prospect of this most important and best paying line of railroad in Georgia or the south, being built, and take pleasure in assuring you of our hearty co-operation and will do all in our power to promote the interest of the enterprise. By reference to the map you will see that Cedartown is directly on the line of your road from Atlanta to Sheffield on the point of its western terminus. Near twenty miles of it would pass through our county, and we propose to use every effort to secure your company the right of way free of cost. Perhaps there is no twenty miles of the route that could be constructed with less expense than that in Polk, passing through Cedartown. Entering Polk on the south at Border's or Wood's gap running through Cedartown and out of Polk at or near Snake Pond or Ordell you traverse the heart of our beautiful valley, richer in farm products than any in Georgia; also through belts of fine timber, touching here other great hills of iron ore, manganese, slate and other minerals, and compara ively over a level route. Border's or Wood's gap, which are close to each other, are the only points at which the road could get through the range of hills on the lines of Paulding, Polk and Haralson, south of us, and luckily they fall right on your direct line. Passing out near Ordell, on our west the route to Center, Alabama, is comparatively free of hills and lies through a country destitue of railroads, and containing a vast amount of fine timber and a good farming country. There is almost, if not quite, as direct a route from Cedartown to Center, Ala., by way of Cartersville and Vanwert railroad, which is already graded and was abandoned by them, the reason of their road having been changed when it became the Cherokee railroad. There might be an item of considerable saving if this old line is adopted. This route secures the freight of Tecumseh, Rock Run, and Stonewall and Rona Furnaces to a large extent, and passes through a region rich in ore and timber. Cedartown has about 1,600 population, and in point of business, educational facilities, religious and moral influences yields the palm to none of her size in the state. It is the location of the large iron furnace and foundry works of the Cherokee iron company and the shops and headquarters of the East and West railroads of Alabama, and the terminus of the Rome and Carrollton railroad. By the 1st of November we will have in operation a cotton compress backed by a strong local company. We will receive this season ten to twelve thousand bales of cotton, and yet ours is not properly a cotton country, though producing per acre next to the highest of the counties in the state. We grow clover and the grasses and all grain equal to Tennessee and might boast of as fine stock. Nestled down here among the cedars, on the beautiful stream of Cedar creek, in the heart of Cedar valley, second to but few in the United States, kindly hugged in north and west by the grandest mountain scenery that breaks the winter's frost and inspires the heart and mind of the beholder with noblest thought and deed, Cedartown opens her heart to your great undertaking and invites, yea, urges you to come in and enjoy these good things with us. Link us more directly with bars of iron to your city, and we will empty into your lap something where of your heart's will be glad. In conclusion, allow us to say the hospitality, courtesy and assiwance of Cedartown is at the command of those engaged in this wortay cause. We will meet you at any time at our county line or elsewhere on the south, and see you through Polk, and further on to the west and aid in looking out the line. We regret Major A. G. West, of the East and West railroad of Alabama, one of the committe, is absent in New York and can't join us in this communication. Our association would be glad if you will give this space in your valuable paper, THE CONSTITUTION. Respectfully submitted.

GOOD BYE, SCALPERS.

The Sad Result of Buying Scalped Railroad Tickets.

From the Vicksburg Commercial-Herald.

A week ago four stranded theatrical people, Messrs. Ben Gilfoil and Irvin Bush and the Shepard sisters, of the People's theater, bought scalped railroad tickets to New Orleans from the local scalper Julius Ruhman. Each of the four saved about two dollars by the purchase of the scalped tickets and though the passages were not guaranteed, it was supposed by the purchasers that the tickets were good for the trip. The tourists left on the L., N. O. & T., on which road their tickets were supposed to be good. When a comfortable distance from Vicksburg, its travelers were notified by the conductor that the tickets were good for nothing and would not be accepted.

They were given the alternative of paying their fare or leaving the train. The fares were paid and the discomfited travelers retained the tickets, and this week sent them back to Ruhman with the facts in the case and demanded compensation for the trouble they had been put to. One of the tickets, a limited one, was worthless at the time, for it had expired, and the remainder has evidence of the scalping process, and the conductor was acting under orders from the road officers when he refused to accept it. The scalper is not liable for damages, though he refunded the price of the tickets, and the injured travelers have no ground for action against the railroad company, as the contract made when the tickets were sold by their agent had been broken. The case is the first reported as the result of a meeting of the southern railroad managers and passenger agents, held in New York recently, where a committee on passenger rates reported that it had decided to continue the sale of round trip tickets, but that a special contract ticket should be adopted, which would put a stop to the sale of tickets by scalpers. The contract was signed by all those present. Persons buying tickets from scalpers in the future should exercise due caution, if they wish to avoid annoyance and humiliation.

High Art.

Probably in no other city of its size in America are there more people with cultivated tastes than in Atlanta.

The furore for highly astistic effects in the matter of home decoration has produced a demand for rare examples which are bettter supplied in this city than any other in the south.

Stepping into the foremost establishment of the kind, yesterday, we were struck with the marked improvement in the class of goods afforded in this market, the house alluded to carry a stock that can be equaled only by such cities as New York, Boston and Chicago. Ebonized cabinets filled with the productions of potteries of all Europe, rows of tables covered with choicest specimens of Limoges, Royal Worcester, Minton, Doulton, bric a-brac and objects of vertu in greatest profusion.

Quaint pedestals surmounted by bronzes of exquisite artistic conception, paintings in water colors of subjects that please the eye and afford studies in refreshing lines of thought.

Those who have not recently visited this emporium, which we omited to say, is that of J. P. Stevens & Bro., 47 Whitehall street, will be surprised to see what additions have been made to the size and extent of their salesroom during the past two weeks, new show cases have been put in, and the etablishment filled to overflowing with recent importations of goods.

Messrs. J. P. Stevens & Bro., make also a leading specialty of DIAMONDS, carrying the largest stock of mounted and unset stones, to be found in the market, and offering investments that can be relied upon, as the very best representation of the price paid.

In connection with WATCHES, the STEVENS name is better known than any other, thousands of "Stevens Watches" are in the pockets of railroad men, bankers, merchants and persons to whom accuracy in timekeeping is a matter of importance, and all who have bought them testify to the good qualities to be found in them. An immense stock of watches is carried by this firm. Visitors to the city should by all means see the exhibit made at No. 47 Whitehall street.

The Atlanta Musical Association.

To the Citizens of Atlanta: The officers and directors of the Atlanta Musical association desire to call your attention to the work of this organization. Its object is to increase the musical knowledge of its members, afford them a rational and refining recreation, and to foster and promote a correct musical taste in this community. We believe it to be worthy of the support and patronage of the citizens of this city, and therefore we most earnestly solicit your co-operation in our effort to bring this association to the front rank in excellence, and thereby make it a blessing to our city.

Will you kindly allow your name to be added to those given below as associate members, or, what is better, join as an active member, and realize more fully its benefits? The fee for active members is, gentlemen, $3 00; ladies, $1.00; associate members, $5.00 for the year, which entitles them to two tickets, with reserved seats, for each of the four concerts to be held during the season, also admission to the monthly recitals at the hall, 15½ South Broad street.

W. H. PARKINS, President.
W. E HAMMOND, Vice-President.
ROB'T M. FARRAR, Treasurer.
F. B. SHEPARD, Secretary.

Directors—Samuel W. Goode, J. G. Armstrong, D. D., E. A. Werner, Dr. C. L. Willson, John W. Rhodes, Dr. L. E. Borcheim.

Musical Director—Sumner Salter.

We omit the names which appear with the above circular, that having already been published in these columns.

The management desire especially to call attention to the active membership.

All singers who contemplate joining this association as active members are earnestly requested to hand their names either to the director, the secretary, or any member of the board at once, in order that they may take part in the first concert now in preparation.

Special to the Ladies.

Every lady in Atlanta, and we could say ruthfully every lady in the known world, likes to be stylish. No matter how plain their wearing apparel is they like for it to be fashionable and neat. But how can they know what the latest fashions are? Why visit the store of John M. Miller, 31 Marietta street, and examine his stock of fashion journals. We give below a partial list of the November numbers now in his store: The Young Ladies' Journal. The November number contains a handsome colored triple fashion plate of twenty-four figures for ladies and children, and many valuable illustrations too numerous to mention. Mme. Demorest's Porto Folio of Fashions. Munro's Fashion Bazar. Revuie de la Mode, Demorest's Monthly Magazine, Butterick's Delineator, Gody's Ladies' Book, and L'Art de la Mode. The following November numbers can be found on his counters: Popular Science Monthly, Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, Leslie's Pleasant Hours, Atlantic Monthly, Harper's Monthly and the Family Library.

THE B'NAI B'RITH.

Atlanta's Subscription Nearly Completed—The Subscribers.

A week ago we printed an appeal to our people for subscriptions to secure the location of the B'nai B'rith Orphan asylum for the district of the south at this point. The amount asked for was fifteen thousand dollars from the Jewish citizens of Atlanta, and five thousand dollars from the citizens at large. The subscriptions to each of these lists have been liberal. The fifteen thousand requested from the Jews has been subscribed, and over four thousand dollars of the five thousand asked at the hands of the citizens at large is raised. The small amount yet remaining will be subscribed at once, and Atlanta's offer of twenty thousand dollars for the asylum will be complete. A committee has gone to Macon and other Georgia cities to get up a subscription from those points. It is intended to make Georgia's subscription $35,000, of which Atlanta will give $20,000. It is thought this amount will certainly secure the asylum. We print the list below:

STONE MOUNTAIN CIRCUIT.

No. 1. Turner vs. State. Dismissed for want of service.

No. 5. Morrow vs. Cloud. Complaint, from Clayton. Argued. W. L. Watterson, for plaintiff in error. Stewart & Stewart, for defendant.

No. 3. Georgia Railroad and Banking Co. vs. Olds. Case, from DeKalb. J. B. Cumming; Candler, Thomson & Candler, for plaintiff in error. Harrison & Peeples; J. R. Gray, for defendant.

At the conclusion of the argument of Mr. Peeples in this case, Hon. R. P. Trippe announced to the court the death of Hon. Henry K. McCay, late judge of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Georgia, and formerly one of the justices of this court, which occurred on July 30 last, and asked that a committee, to prepare a memorial of the life and character of the deceased, be appointed. The court appointed the following committee:

Hon. R. P. Trippe,	Hon. R. F. Lyon,
Hon. J. E. Brown,	Hon. O. A. Lochrane,
Hon. W. W. Montgomery,	Hon. L. E. Bleckley,
Hon. A. M. Speer,	Hon. W. A. Hawkins,
Hon. R. H. Clark,	Hon. B. F. Abbott,
Hon. J. W. H. Underwood.

The court then adjourned, as a mark of respect to the deceased, to 9 o'clock Tuesday morning next. The committee will report either at the beginning of the call of the Southwestern circuit or at its close.

Mr. M. Wellhouse's elegant home on Whitehall has just been finished in ingrain paper by J. T. White.

J. T. White has three contracts for next week for decorating to be done in bronzed leather.

Don't fail to take a look at the elegant line of novelty dress goods now on exhibition at John Ryan's.

7,000 rolls of new wall paper just received by J. T. White, 16 Whitehall.

MRS. THEO H. IVIE takes this method of informing the patrons and friends of her late husband, Mr. Theo H. Ivie, that she has decided to continue the photograph business at 40½ Whitehall street, and every effort will be made to keep the work to its former standard of excellence. None but perfect work will be turned out from the gallery. Please give her a trial and you will be satisfied with the work and prices.

Lower prices than any works south. Also MILLS, and ELEVATORS, and BROOKS COTTON

LIVE FIRM, LIVE BUSINESS.

A. A. DeLoach & Bro's. Foundry and What is Going on There.

A specialty in milling machinery that is attracting attention throughout the whole south, is that conducted by A. A. DeLoach & Bro. on Marietta street. They are two young men, (Georgians too), full of energy and push and their practical knowledge of their business is proven by the work they are doing, shipping their water wheels, portable mills, mill stones, flour mill outfits and mill gearing all over the south and in some cases to the north and west.

The very excellent workmen they have employed is a guarantee of the finest work. The machine shops with improved tools and recent additions under the management of Mr. D. Hoyt, one of the very best machinists to be found anywhere, turns out the work in first-class style and in short order. Mr. Hoyt is well known in Atlanta and his ability as a machinist much appreciated. Under Mr. Hoyt in his department, comes Mr. Clasby, a thorough machinist, well known to all this section, and who worked for years in the shops of Pool & Hunt, Baltimore, Mr. Smith and Mr. Slack, two very fine workman, besides many others, almost as skillful. Mr. A. F. Parks has charge of the well equipped foundry and turns out the very finest castings. The hoist in the foundry is capable of handling castings weighing three tons. Mr. Phillip Stovall, an inventor, and one of the best millwrights in the United States of forty years' experience, has charge of the millwright and mill counstructing department, and the mills turned out here are just simply perfect in mechanism and beauties in finish.

Their pattern maker, Mr. Slack, is a fine millwright, of over forty years experience in the northwest among the best mills of the union. Mr. Geo. Young runs the millstone department, and his part of the work, though dusty, is very important and he takes great pride in making every stone just as it should be to make good meal and flour.

There is the crush mill and several other machines made by this firm. Altogether it is a busy concern.

They have a fine exhibit at the State fair at Macon.

The hospital fair will open Tuesday next. The building is being handsomely decorated. The ladies will meet again Monday morning and complete their work ready for the opening on the following day. A committee for the churches who have charge of tables will be there to receive all donations of every description and assign them to the tables to which they are donated. Everything promises great success. It will certainly be one of the most pleasant and enjoyable entertainments ever given in the city. The object of the fair seems to be fully appreciated by all our good people.

out the fact that we have positively the largest and most carefully selected stock of DIAMONDS to be found in Atlanta. We also desire to state that, quality considered, we can demonstrate our prices the lowest.

We are satisfied with a smaller profit upon this staple of recognized value than other parties have been asking. While we do not carry a stock of CHEAP GOODS, we can protect our customers in furnishing the PUREST GEMS at the lowest prices that such stones can be bought.

Having just opened an importation of very choice Unset Stones, we specially invite attention of purchasers.

We offer investments that are absolutely safe and unequaled by any other security except U. S. bonds.

A DRY GOODS FRESHET.

It is a positive fact that our business is on a boom—a regular "Sabine Pass" simoon, cyclone or whatever you may call it, has struck somewhere, and we are getting about all we can do to take care of it. Common sense, sound logic, and cold, frigid facts, will or ought to win every time. Somehow or other or somehow else, the idea has gotten out that we are selling goods wonderfully low. We haven't done much blowing, that is, we haven't said a great deal about it, but the people have "caught on" to our bargains, and we are flooded with custom.

Now, we don't claim great big things. We don't do the largest business; we don't buy out whole factories or any of that kind of nonsense. But we DO BUY FOR CASH; we DO select our own bargains personally; we DO carry a beautiful line of Dry Goods, and we ARE getting the business on the merit, fact and truth of our LOW PRICES.

What is the result? Just this: That our trade has surpassed our own most sanguine expectation. That the public has confidence in us. That when we obtain a customer we retain him.

OUR CIRCUS OF BARGAINS

Has arrived, and now is the time for the people to get the worth of their money.

Our Hosiery stock is complete, and you can buy a 40c Stocking from us for 20c.

You can buy a 75c Cashmere for 45c.

And a $1.50 Cashmere for 90c.

And you can buy a $20 Cloak for $10.

These are a few of our long list of bargains, which continue from front to rear of our store in every department,

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT!

LARGEST STORE SOUTH

CHAMBERLIN, JOHNSON & CO.,

Importers.

DRY GOODS, CARPETS,

Millinery, Shoes and Dressmaking.

We have opened this week another lot of beautiful Dress Goods, and with the addition of these lovely patterns to our already mammoth stock of elegant Paris styles, leaves no doubt on the minds of buyers, especially after a close examination, that we undoubtedly have the largest and most elegant and varied stock of Silks and Wools ever shown in the southern states. Our trade is unprecedented in the history of our business career, and we can but attribute the pleasant fact to determination on our part to handle nothing but the very best, and to guarantee every article to be just as represented, besides buying from first hands in immense quantities.

IN SILKS

We have by far the largest and most elegant stock of fine imported goods ever offered to the southern trade, and we can easily demonstrate the fact beyond a doubt to any reasonable mind that THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST.

IN WOOLENS,

As in Silks, we have the most superbly magnificent stock, as well as the largest, in all the country, with a full and complete line of French Novelties in silks and velvets for trimmings.

In Parti Shades We Lead the Van.

Having the most exquisite Paris styles in silks in the latest designs in endless variety.

Many of these magnificent goods cannot, without injury, be displayed in our windows, even if we desired to make them common.

IN LADIES' CLOAKS.

All the new styles in seal skin, plush, silk and wool. See this enormous stock of wraps before making a selection.

In Table Linens, Napkins,

D'Oyles, Towels, Blankets, Quilts, Hosiery, Gloves, Cassimeres, Underwear, etc., we have the largest and best selected stocks to be found, and in

SHOES AND BOOTS

For Ladies, Gents, Misses, Boys and Children. We keep an enormous stock, and guarantee a perfect fit as well as a perfect shoe, and every pair is made to order for us, and we keep the widths as well as the lengths in all the sizes.

Children's School Shoes a Specialty.

CARPETS! CARPETS!

In Wiltons, Axminsters, Moquetts, Velvets, Brussels, Tapestries, Ex. and Sup. Ex. Ingrains 5/8, 3/4 and 6-4 English Brussels and Velvets, Hemps, Venetians, etc., etc., with rugs woven to match. Also the Portier and Drapery Goods in endless variety.

In Carpets we defy competition in every sense and meaning of the word. We are the only importers in these goods. We are the only agents for English mills. We are the only firm who ever paid duties here. We alone get our goods direct, and we alone handle any class of imported Carpets direct from first hands; and handling these magnificent goods direct from the factories we can and do save our customers 20 and many times 25 per cent, which amount is necessary to pay the middle man, and no house can handle same quality at our prices.

It may be impossible for us to put your Carpet down just when you want it, but with all the first class help that can be had we promise that you shall have the carpets at the time promised. Our work in this department was never so great, and we have tried to surmount all impossibilities. Still we beg indulgence, as the work is simply immense, such as was never known in Atlanta before in the carpet trade.

Dress Making and Millinery

All to order, with a guarantee to be of the latest styles and to please.

Now remember, for dry goods, carpets, millinery, shoes and dress making, see our immense stocks before you place your orders.

FINANCE AND COMMERCE

Bonds, Stocks and Money.

CONSTITUTION OFFICE,
ATLANTA, October 23, 1886.

Business in securities continues to improve, and there is now constant inquiry for safe investments. Railroad stocks are not difficult to buy, but bonds are scarce; and, although bringing pretty stiff prices now, will sell higher in the near future. Atlanta was not, up to a couple of years back, an important market for securities, but within that time the business has grown very much, and the volume will constantly increase.

The want of confidence in real estate investments, manufacturing enterprises and other channels of trade has of course had something to do with this change, but another reason, and the important one, is that the wealth of the town is increasing, and people are inclined to place their money in something always immediately available.

Good bonds and dividend paying stocks supply this want as nothing else can do, and as people become better convinced of this the greater will be the demand for that class of securities.

One thing worthy of mention is that the stocks of our local banks rarely offer, and when they do, are readily saleable at handsome premiums. This testifies the prosperity of our moneyed institutions as well as a condition of harmony between officers and stockholders.

Our new railroad enterprises are progressing well and we learn that engineers will be put out next Monday making the permanent location for the Atlanta and Hawkinsville road. In this connection it will not be amiss to repeat a suggestion made sometime ago in this column, that is, that sooner or later a rail connection between the Atlanta and Hawkinsville and the Americus, Preston and Lumpkin road will be of great value to both, and we confidently expect to see it built. The latter road is pushing its extension right along and is now receiving new rolling stock to meet the increased business which is rapidly flowing in upon it.

The suggestion of the Atlantic, Mississippi and Atlanta road has been received with greater favor by our people than any similar enterprise ever did and when put in practical shape will meet with liberal response of a material character. Placed in the hands of experienced, honest men who will work in the interests of the company and not with a view to filling their own pockets, the road is a possibility at a much smaller cost than is customary in this day of big debt and little roads.

Central stock is being floundered round trying to get up another boom, but its a heavy job and don't boom much.

IN WALL STREET.

How Benner's Prophecies About the Fluctuation of Prices Turned Out.

NEW YORK, October 23—[Special.]—The bull movement, now under way in Wall street, discredits some of the theories of prices to which operators formerly pinned their faith. Samuel Benner, the Ohio farmer, whose book, forecasting prices, published in 1875, attracted wide spread attention, because he really predicted the rise and fall of iron and stocks up to 1881, has naturally been quite an authority among certain operators. Last spring, however, he published two communications, in which he put forth certain forecasts which have not been verified by the course of the market this fall. He was correct in anticipating a large crop of cereals, especially wheat and unusually low prices for them. But he also gave it as his judgment that there would be little demand for iron, and that securities would all sell of all kinds off. In these foreshadowings, he but repeated what had already been published in his "Prophecies," wherein he laid down what he calls his "lair of periodicity." In this generalization, panics are due in periods of time varying from eighteen to twenty-one years. These financial catastrophes are preceded by a wild inflation. According to Benner's data, the year of highest prices will not come until 1888, and a panic is due in 1889. But '86 and '87 should, if this theory was correct, be distinguished by depressed trade, and low prices for stocks and iron.

Those who are in a position to know say that Henry N. Smith's fortune was due to his profound belief in "Benner's Prophecies." When the tide turned from higher to lower prices in the autumn of 1885, the leaders of the street were bears, who had made large fortunes by selling stock short for the previous three years. Among them were Charles Woerischoffer, Wm. H. Travis, Addison Cammack, Henry N. Smith and others of lesser note. Even Jay Gould and Deacon S. V. White failed to realize the significance of the absorbtion of the West Shore road by the New York Central. That was the turning point in the happy harmonizing of the warring elements in the railroad world. Smith was convinced that the advance in prices was all a mistake, and that the bubble must collapse. He made no secret to his friends, so it is said, that this theory of the situation was derived from Benner's Prophecies, which, having been right from '75 to '81, could not be wrong in '85 and '86. His audacious selling of the market when prices were rushing up, eventually ruined him as well as Heath & Co., his brokers.

There is, however, another theory of prices, which gains a good deal of acceptance in New York financial circles. And this is that every four years marks the change from a bull to a bear market and vice-versa. Prices, for instance, steadily declined from the fall of 1873 to the spring of 1878. The partial remonetization of silver marked the beginning of an era of enhancing values. This developed into the "boom," which did not end until the summer of 1881. Then came four years of depression and constantly lowering values, which culminated in the summer of 1885. Since that time there has been a certain, though somewhat intermittent advance, which should continue until 1889, the year oddly enough designated by Benner, for the periodical catastrophe, such as that of '37, '57 and '73.

The belief is universal here that a general bull movement is under way, which is certain to last for this crop year, at least. The great increase in stock dealings for one thing tells the story. With prices from fifteen to twenty per cent, higher than they were sometime since, the transactions have quadrupled. Then as in all periods of stock speculations one group of securities after another is taken hold of and advanced to higher quotations. The Vanderbilts led the upward march in the summer of 1885; the Coalers, under the lead of Reading, have been the bull inspiration this fall; the Grangers have had their day and will have it again, and presently even the corn roads will be heard from.

There are two factors in the situation which the bulls confidently expect will help to stimulate the activity of the market, and bring about higher and still higher quotations. One is the addition to the currency, through the issue of small silver certificates. The $7,000,000 of mint silver dollars in the treasury will be mobilized and added to the currency in active circulation. Under the law, the volume of greenbacks can not be contracted, and hence the one and two dollar notes retired must be issued in larger denominations. The periods of wildest speculation in England was in 1825, when the government authorized the issue of one pound notes. When the silver issues are gorging all the channels of retail trade we must expect a period of extreme business activity, which will first show itself in the exchanges, and will finally spread to all the marts of trade. Securities will first go up, then merchandise will be in demand and finally land and labor will partake of the general enhancement on values.

The other influence will be the better times in the world at large. All accounts agree that the trade outlook in Europe is better than it has been for years. This has been attributed to the prospect that silver may be unhabitable as a money metal. This will advance prices, more especially in those articles which enter into international commerce. The most sagacious people in the street believe that a change has taken place in the trade of the world, and then grain and cotton, food and clothing of all kinds will be in demand and at advancing prices. DAVID G. CROLY.

NEW YORK STOCKS.

Stocks as Reported at the New York Stock Exchange.

NEW YORK, October 23.—Today's stock market was the smallest for a month or more. It was dull almost from beginning to end, monotony being relieved only by dives made by the bears. There was little done except by professional traders and only Jersey Central, Western Union and St. Paul showed any activity whatever. Efforts to the bears principally were directed against Jersey Central. But it resisted stubbornly the wildest breaks being only one, but soon as the pressure was removed it again recovered and for the first time in many days shows a net advance at the close. The dive was made at the New York Central in the early part of the afternoon and its price depressed 1⅛, but it also recovered later. The Western Union attracted considerable attention and was noticeably strong throughout the day. A rumor was circulated that a heavy pool had been made in the Jersey Central, which induced buying by the room traders. St. Paul when attacked also repeated the example set by the Jersey Central. The opening was heavy to weak, first prices showing declines ranging from ⅛ to ⅜. The prices were irregular, but became firm before noon with the market very dull. In the last hour there was more activity accompanied by increased strength and the market closed quiet but firm, at the best figures of the day. There were very few net declines for the day and in only two cases, the Western Union with 1½ and the Texas Pacific with 1, were the advances for more than the fractional amounts. Sales 220,000 shares.

Exchange 480¼. Money 4@6. Sub-treasury balances: Coin, $125,904,000; currency $22,859,000. Governments dull; 4s 128⅜; 3s 99⅞ bid. State bonds quiet.

NEW YORK, October 23—C. L. Green & Co., in their report on cotton futures today, say: Trading was very free, and after the opening a decline of some 3@4 points the market held fairly steady for the rest of the day. The selling seemed to come mainly from covering by shorts, who preferred assured profits to taking any chances by going over into next week. There has, however, been much soiling of old long contracts, especially on the near months, with continued pressure from the south.

NEW YORK, October 23—The total visible supply of cotton for the world is 1,635,551 bales, of which 1,123,451 bales are American, against 1,636,083 bales and 1,407,183 respectively last year. Receipts at all interior towns 178,757 bales. Receipts from plantations 308,487. Crop in sight 1,274,414 bales.

THE CHICAGO MARKET.

Special to The Constitution.

CHICAGO, October 23—After an easy opening wheat became active and firm and at times buoyant, being aided by reports of injury to fall sown wheat in various districts by reason of drouth. November options started at 74⅞c, sold off to 74¾c, but on good buying advanced to 75¾c with shorts showing fright and covering freely. There was a reaction toward the close, a portion of the advance being lost, values closing for the day about the same as yesterday.

It did not take corn and oats long to feel the inspiring effects of a higher market, and in response thereto May corn sold up to 41⅛c and May oats to 31c. This trade was conducted entirely by local operators.

January pork sold up to $9.80, but trade was slow and the close dull.

THROUGH THE CITY.

Pencil Paragraphs Caught on the Fly by the Constitution Reporters.

AT ST. LUKE'S—Rev. W. D. Powers, of Rome, will preach at St. Luke's this morning at 11 o'clock.

GOOD MUSIC TO DAY.—Millard's mass in "B" will be performed with a full orchestra in the church of the Immaculate Conception today at 10:30 a. m.

ONE MORE UNFORTUNATE.—Special Revenue Agent Colquitt made a raid into Dawson county Friday night and seized a still, the property of Jack Holloway, who escaped arrest.

DEATH OF A CHILD—Yesterday morning the one year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sams, of Decatur, died after an illness of only a few days. The funeral services will be held this morning at 9 o'clock. Interment at Oakland.

ORIGIN AND DESTINY OF MAN.—Thursday evening at the First Methodist church Rev. W. J. Scott will deliver an lecture on man, his origin and destiny. Dr. Scott is one of the most learned lecturers in the south, and those who attend may expect a rare treat.

TOMORROW NIGHT.—The new lodge of Knights of Pythias will meet tomorrow night for conferring the degrees upon the charter members. All members are requested to meet at K. P. hall, at junction of Peachtree and Broad streets, at 7½ o'clock p.m., prompt.

THEY HAVE RETURNED.—Messrs. Henry Beerman and Chas. Beerman returned from Boston, New York and Canada, where they have been for the past two weeks. Mr. Henry Beerman went to Boston to attend the convention of sodawater men of the United States.

HE HAS ARRIVED.—A special from Waco, Texas, states that Deputy Marshal McDonald had reached that place and would go to Hillsboro today or tomorrow to identify Coffee. The habeas corpus case will be heard tomorrow afternoon. There is little doubt but that the prisoner is the right man.

THE HENDRIX MISSION.—The revival at the Hendrix Mission, 629 Marietta street, is still in progress, and will be continued next week. The Rev. Mr. Ellington and the Rev. Mr. Dunlap will conduct the services with the aid of other ministers. There will be a children's revival this morning at nine o'clock.

COTTON BURNING.—An alarm of fire was rung in about nine o'clock last night from box 51, located at the Central railroad depot, on Mitchell street. The alarm was caused by an incipient fire in some cotton on a flat car near the depot. The department responded to the call promptly and extinguished the fire before any great damage had been done.

A LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.—Mr. Thomas Veal, sanitary inspector, yesterday received a letter from Mr. William Venable, who is at Hot Springs, expressing his deep sorrow at the death of Walter Veal. Mr. Veal was in the service of the Stone Mountain Granite company at the time of his death, and in his letter Mr. Venable expresses the great confidence in him entertained by the company.

UNITED STATES COURT.—Yesterday in the circuit court Samuel Walker, charged with working, wholesaleing, furnishing raw material, removing and concealing, was found not guilty. Cloddy Christian, removing, concealing and working, plea and verdict not guilty. Colonel W. A. Wimbish was admitted to practice in the United States circuit court and district courts. He stood a creditable examination. At 10 o'clock tomorrow the docket will be called.

M. KUTZ & CO.—The novelties in the millinery line offered by M. Kutz & Co. are the talk of the town. Day after day their store is crowded, and still the people are not satisfied. Four times they have sent their buyer to New York. Their stock of bonnets, hats, feathers and French millinery cannot be surpassed. Everybody is cordially invited to call and examine their goods. Go elsewhere first if they will, and then price their goods for they will bear competition.

ADMITTED TO THE BAR.—Yesterday in the superior court, before Judge Richard Clarke, Mr. Charles F. Baker and Mr. Ralph Wright were admitted to the bar. Judge Clarke complimented both gentlemen highly in their very creditable examination, which was said to have been unusually good. Mr. Baker studied law under Hon. Wellborn Bray, and Mr. Wright under Messrs. Milledge & Smith. Both are young gentlemen of indomitable energy, and their bright beginning yesterday argues a successful career at the bar.

THE TROOPS LEAVE.—The Second Artillery, which has been encamped at Camp Hancock during the summer, leave for Florida today. Orders for the removal were received from the war department day before yesterday. The troops will leave at o'clock this afternoon by the West Point railroad, and after they reach Florida will be placed on duty at the prison in which Geronimo is confined. The Atlanta boys, who leave with the second, carry along the best wishes of their friends.

MR. JOHN J. WOODSIDE FOR COUNCIL.—The announcement of Mr. John J. Woodside for councilman from the sixth ward, is made in another column. Mr. Woodside is well known in Atlanta as a member of the firm of E. Roberts & Co., and as a man of sturdy business qualifications and of eminent fitness for the position for which his name will be urged. He will find warm supporters throughout the city. He is one of Atlanta's most progressive young men, and as such would, if elected, make a progressive and painstaking councilman.

GONE TO MEMPHIS.—Mr. Jerry Seymore, widely and favorably known in Atlanta commercial circles, has gone to Memphis to accept an important and responsible position with the wholesale house of C. R. Ryan & Co. Mr. Seymore is a young man of fine business qualifications, and his departure from Atlanta is regretted by all who knew him. He is possessed of a frank, open manner and genial, pleasant ways, which makes friends for him rapidly. The evening previous to Mr. Seymore's departure he was tendered a banquet by his friends, Mr. James Hunter and Mr. Du...

SMILLIE SEMINARY LECTURES.—Mrs. Smillie has arranged for a winter course of lectures on comparative literature, which will be quite a noted feature in her school. Grecian, Roman, Hindoo and Russian literature will be handled by Rev. Dr. J. G. Armstrong. German literature will be discoursed upon by Mr. C. W. Hubner. Mr. P. J. M... has been invited to treat on English literature, while Rev. Dr. Chaney will speak on American literature. The course will be opened by Dr. J. G. Armstrong tomorrow night, in the seminary, corner Church and Fairlie streets. Admission will be free by ticket. Tickets may be had on application to Mrs. Smillie. Mrs. Floyd has been added to the corps of teachers.

THE CONSTITUTION.

THROUGH THE CITY.

Pencil Paragraphs Caught on the Fly by the Constitution Reporters.

AT ST. LUKE'S.—Rev. W. D. Powers, of Rome, will preach at St. Luke's this morning at 11 o'clock.

GOOD MUSIC TO DAY.—Millard's mass in "B" will be performed with a full orchestra in the church of the Immaculate Conception today at 10:30 a. m.

ONE MORE UNFORTUNATE.—Special Revenue Agent Colquitt made a raid into Dawson county Friday night and seized a still, the property of Jack Holloway, who escaped arrest.

DEATH OF A CHILD.—Yesterday morning the one year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sams, of Decatur, died after an illness of only a few days. The funeral services will be held this morning at 9 o'clock. Interment at Oakland.

ORIGIN AND DESTINY OF MAN.—Thursday evening at the First Methodist church Rev. W. J. Scott will deliver an lecture on man, his origin and destiny. Dr. Scott is one of the most learned lecturers in the south, and those who attend may expect a rare treat.

TOMORROW NIGHT.—The new lodge of Knights of Pythias will meet tomorrow night for conferring the degrees upon the charter members. All members are requested to meet at K. P. hall, at junction of Peachtree and Broad streets, at 7½ o'clock p.m., prompt.

THEY HAVE RETURNED.—Messrs. Henry Beerman and Chas. Beerman returned from Boston, New York and Canada, where they have been for the past two weeks. Mr. Henry Beerman went to Boston to attend the convention of sodawater men of the United States.

HE HAS ARRIVED.—A special from Waco, Texas, states that Deputy Marshal McDonald had reached that place and would go to Hillsboro today or tomorrow to identify Coffee. The habeas corpus case will be heard tomorrow afternoon. There is little doubt but that the prisoner is the right man.

THE HENDRIX MISSION.—The revival at the Hendrix Mission, 629 Marietta street, is still in progress, and will be continued next week. The Rev. Mr. Ellington and the Rev. Mr. Dunlap will conduct the services with the aid of other ministers. There will be a children's revival this morning at nine o'clock.

COTTON BURNING.—An alarm of fire was rung in about nine o'clock last night from box 51, located at the Central railroad depot, on Mitchell street. The alarm was caused by an incipient fire in some cotton on a flat car near the depot. The department responded to the call promptly and extinguished the fire before any great damage had been done.

A LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.—Mr. Thomas Veal, sanitary inspector, yesterday received a letter from Mr. William Venable, who is at Hot Springs, expressing his deep sorrow at the death of Walter Veal. Mr. Veal was in the service of the Stone Mountain Granite company at the time of his death, and in his letter Mr. Venable expresses the great confidence in him entertained by the company.

UNITED STATES COURT.—Yesterday in the circuit court Samuel Walker, charged with working, wholesaleing, furnishing raw material, removing and concealing, was found not guilty. Cloddy Christian, removing, concealing and working, plea and verdict not guilty. Colonel W. A. Wimbish was admitted to practice in the United States circuit court and district courts. He stood a creditable examination. At 10 o'clock tomorrow the docket will be called.

M. KUTZ & CO.—The novelties in the millinery line offered by M. Kutz & Co. are the talk of the town. Day after day their store is crowded, and still the people are not satisfied. Four times they have sent their buyer to New York. Their stock of bonnets, hats, feathers and French millinery cannot be surpassed. Everybody is cordially invited to call and examine their goods. Go elsewhere first if they will, and then price their goods; for they will bear competition.

ADMITTED TO THE BAR.—Yesterday in the superior court, before Judge Richard Clarke, Mr. Charles F. Baker and Mr. Ralph Wright were admitted to the bar. Judge Clarke complimented both gentlemen highly in their very creditable examination, which was said to have been unusually good. Mr. Baker studied hard under Hon. Wellborn Bray, and Mr. Wright under Messrs. Milledge & Smith. Both are young gentlemen of indomitable energy, and their bright beginning yesterday argues a successful career at the bar.

THE TROOPS LEAVE.—The Second Artillery, which has been encamped at Camp Hancock during the summer, leave for Florida today. Orders for the removal were received from the war department day before yesterday. The troops will leave at one o'clock this afternoon by the West Point railroad, and after they reach Florida will be placed on duty at the prison in which Geronimo is confined. The Atlanta boys, who will leave with the second, carry along the best wishes of their friends.

MR. JOHN J. WOODSIDE FOR COUNCIL.—The announcement of Mr. John J. Woodside for councilman from the sixth ward, is made in another column. Mr. Woodside is well known in Atlanta as a member of the firm of E. M. Roberts & Co., and as a man of sturdy business qualifications and of eminent fitness for the position for which his name will be urged. He will find warm supporters throughout the city. He is one of Atlanta's most progressive young men, and as such would, if elected, make a progressive and painstaking councilman.

GONE TO MEMPHIS.—Mr. Jerry Seymore, so widely and favorably known in Atlanta's commercial circles, has gone to Memphis to accept an important and responsible position with the wholesale house of C. R. Ryan & Co. Mr. Seymore is a young man of fine business qualifications, and his departure from Atlanta is regretted by all who knew him. He is possessed of a frank, open manner and genial, pleasant ways, which makes friends for him rapidly. The evening previous to Mr. Seymore's departure he was tendered a banquet by his friends, Mr. James Hunter and Mr. Dug Dean.

THE JUG LINE.

HOW THE THIRSTY ATLANTIANS GET LIQUOR.

Going to the Depot to See the Jug Train Come in—A Talk with General Agent Hulbert—What He Thinks of the Jug Line—The Druggists Besieged with Dry Topers.

"Let's go down and meet the jug train," remarked a gentleman to a CONSTITUTION reporter yesterday afternoon, just before the Central train came in.

"The jug train?" asked the reporter.

"Yes. You will see a sight which you will remember for many years. Come on."

The reporter accepted the invitation and reached the depot just as the Central train moved around the curve at Broad street bridge. There was a number of gentlemen standing around, and occasionally something would be said about the jug train, which appeared to be the most important one to arrive. When the train rolled in there was a rush for the express car door. There appeared to be little else in the car beside jugs. One by one they were handed out and placed on the trucks. Some of the more thirsty souls would examine the cards tagged to the handles, and when a man would find the one marked to himself would keep an eye on it and follow the trucks to the express office, pay the charges and make off with the fluid to some convenient place, where they could swig it down.

A TALK WITH COLONEL HULBERT.

"Does this thing happen every day?" asked the reporter of Colonel Hulbert, general agent of the express company.

"Every day? Yes, and several times a day, for that matter," was the reply.

"How many jugs have you received today?"

"About fifty."

"The bulk of them came from Griffin?"

"Yes, but Gainesville, Augusta, Macon and Chattanooga are doing their part of the jug business."

"Is the business increasing?"

"Right along. I dare say that a month from now you will see two hundred jugs of whisky delivered here every day. You see, it has only been a few days since the last quart saloon closed, and most people have a supply on hand. When this supply gives out of course they will be forced to which is becoming very popular."

"Well, colonel, does prohibitionists patronize the line?"

"Certainly they do. I could name dozens. Some funny things happen here in the office. A prohibitionist don't like to be seen lugging a jug around, and when they can't get a basket to put their jug in they pay a coon to carry it home for them. A few of them have the jugs packed in boxes, baskets and nail kegs. These are the fellows who take a nip behind the door."

"Is there any truth in the report that a special jug train will be placed on the Central?"

"Guess not. For the present the regular trains can accommodate the thirsty Atlantians. Are you expecting a jug?"

"Not this aft."

"Well, when it comes bring along twenty-five or thirty cents to pay charges."

THE TOPERS BESEIGING THE DRUGGISTS.

The druggists are having a hard time of it. A prominent druggist said on yesterday: "My business is absolutely painful to me. I am called on every hour in the day by some man who whispers to me and begs for liquor. He insists that I have it and that I can sell him a little of it if I will. The druggists are having a lively fight."

Of course no drug store can keep liquor for sale under any circumstances. They are not permitted to fill doctors prescriptions. They do keep alcohol, however, which they are permitted under the law to sell for mechanical, manufacturing, medicinal or art purposes. The topers have found this out and are making a dead rush for alcohol. A prominent retail druggist said:

"You would be amused to see the tricks they take to get it. A man will come in the store with plumbers tools in hand, and holding up his spirit lamp will ask to have it filled with alcohol. In a few minutes another man comes in with the same lamp. A boy fourteen years old came into my store today with a toy engine. He took out the little boiler and had me fill it with ten cents worth of alcohol. In a half hour he came back and wanted it filled again. I inquired into it and found that he was drinking it himself, and of course sold him no more. Another man came in so drunk he could hardly stand, and wanted some alcohol 'to make varnish with.' Alcohol is the only thing that will dissolve shellac, and he said he wanted to make some shellac varnish. Another man proposed to buy some alcohol to mix with camphor to put on

HIS BOY'S SORE FOOT.

I proposed to mix the camphor for him but he said: 'Just give me the alcohol straight, and I will mix it.' All day long they come in with one excuse and another. We, of course, try not to sell it, but when they make a demand under the law we are obliged to let them have it."

"Is not alcohol very injurious?"

"I should say so. Whisky has from 24 to 48 per cent alcohol in it. Brandy 56 per cent, wines from 12 to 18 per cent, while the alcohol we sell has 98 per cent. Besides this, the alcohol has the fusile oil which liquors have not, and it lacks the bouquet, or ether, which lessens the evil effect of whisky. The alcohol drinker is a gone coon."

"Do you have many physicians' prescriptions sent in for liquor?"

"We refused four to-day. Most of the physicians realize that they cannot get a liquor prescription filled, as the law specially prohibits it, but still many of them will try it. Dr. Tallia ferro came to me yesterday for a bottle of champaigne for a very sick patient He could not find it in town. I let him have a bottle that I happened to have at my home, and he told me today that it saved the patient's life."

Still another druggist said:

"We cannot help selling alcohol when a man calls for it, and says he wants it for medicinal, mechanical or art purposes. We have no right to disbelieve what he says. There is no way for us to prove whether it is true or false, and when he calls for alcohol and we ask him if it is for one of these purposes, we have done all we can do. I hope the demand for alcohol will lessen. It will kill the men who drink it. They get it here, take it out, dilute it with artesian water and down it goes to burn the bottoms of their stomachs."

At the drugstores there was no sign of a rush for alcohol, but during a half hour's watch at one drugstore a reporter saw three or four applications which may have been for honest purposes, but which appeared to be otherwise.

THE PLACE.
A GRAND OPENING YESTERDAY.
30 WHITEHALL ST.
WILL EVER HEREAFTER BE FAMOUS.

"The Place," a new store with new goods, has its doors now thrown open to the public. We have bought $50,000 worth of goods for spot cash. These goods were all bought from first hands, and at 50 per cent less than the usual way, on four and six months' time. We know when, where and what to buy, and have spared no pains in selecting this stock. We have named our store "The Place," because in it you can find any and everything you want. A full line of jewelry, musical instruments, toys, cutlery, albums, crockery, soaps, colognes, light hardware, etc., etc., are kept. Remember all of our stock is choice, everything first class, and we can save you, too, from 50 to 100 per cent, if you will buy from us. We got bargains in New York, where we personally bought our goods, and we intend to give you bargains if you will only call at "The Place." We will receive the first, and during the week, $10,000 worth of the finest and assorted line of crockery ever brought to Atlanta, all bought at a bargain, and it will go the same way to our customers.

We desire to say to the merchants, not only of Atlanta, but in the towns of Georgia and other states, that they can save money by buying goods of us, as we will sell them at less than they can be had at headquarters. Yes, indeed, we will save the merchants and everybody else from 50 to 100 per cent. We mean business, and want you to call right now and secure bargains.

Remember 30 Whitehall is "THE PLACE."

Grand Display of Silks.

The most extravagant display of silks that we have seen for a long time is now shown in the window of our popular merchant, Mr. J. M. High. To look at them and think for a moment how many yards the window must contain, a person would wonder when he expected to see them all. To one not acquainted with the magnitude of his sales it would seem folly to buy so many thousand yards at one time, but herein lies the secret of his great bargains. Mr. High says that this lot of silks were bought at a force sale below their value. They will be seen next week at prices so cheap that anyone can buy a silk and velvet. Possibly no other merchant in the south has the trade to buy such large lots of silks outside of Mr. High. He is a wonderful man with a wonderful trade.

Delightful Social Event.

Captain and Mrs. Harry Jackson gave a dinner, at 8 o'clock, p. m., yesterday, at their handsome residence on West Mitchell street. It was in honor of General Henry R. Jackson. The occasion was an exceedingly pleasant one, the distinguished guests making a rare combination of wit and wisdom. The guests were:

General Henry R. Jackson, Governor McDaniel, Governor Joseph E. Brown, Judge Erskine, Major Mims, Judge Jackson, Judge Blandford, Judge Newman, Judge Marshall Clarke, Mr. Hoke Smith, Mr. W. H. Parsons, Judge VanEpps, Judge George Hillyer, Mr. Tom Cobb Jackson.

DEATH OF R. W. ALSTON

A SAD EVENT IN WASHINGTON YESTERDAY.

Mr. Robert W. Alston Meets His Death in the Office of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury—Particulars of the Sad Occurrence—The Remains to be Brought to Atlanta.

About noon yesterday, Mr. B. H. Hill, Jr., received a telegram from Mr. E. I. Renick, formerly of Atlanta, and now law clerk in the office of the first comptroller of the treasury department, announcing that Mr. Robert W. Alston had fatally shot himself.

This gloomy intelligence rapidly spread through the city and everywhere was heard with pain and regret. The first account giving the particulars of the sad event came in the following special dispatch to THE CONSTITUTION:

WASHINGTON, October 23.—[Special.]—There was a scene in the recording division of the sixth auditor's office this morning, which sent a shudder of horror through the Georgia colony here. Robert W. Alston, of Atlanta, who was a clerk there, shot and killed himself. Shortly before ten o'clock, Alston walked to a fellow clerk named Rickey, and taking that gentleman by the hand, said:

"Good morning, my dear friend."

He then went to his place. Rickey, Major Evans and one of the other clerks happened to look up a few moments afterward. They saw Alston standing before them. The young man quickly but carefully removed his hat, and brushing the hair from his right temple, put the muzzle of the revolver to his head and fired before any one could prevent him. He fell instantly, and did not speak afterwards. His three fellow clerks Messrs. Rickey, Evans and Williams, rushed to him at once, but it was too late. The heavy load had crushed through the temple, passed through the interior lobe of the brain and out on the left side. The pistol was placed so near his head that the hair was singed and the skull badly shattered. The bullet, after passing through his head, struck the wall and knocked out a piece of plastering. Dr. Dudley Morgan was quickly summoned, and administered hypodermic injections, which kept Alston alive for about forty minutes, though he was not restored to consciousness. He died a little after 10 o'clock. The tragedy, of course, created great excitement in the office and the clerks in the basement were excused for the remainder of the day. The coroner made an examination and gave a certificate of death in accordance with the above facts. The remains were turned over to Undertaker Lee to prepare for burial. Alston wrote a letter to his aunt this morning, and only a few minutes before he committed suicide He handed the letter over to Major Evans, one of the clerks in the office, saying he would entrust him to forward it to Mr. F. H. Richardson, of THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION. The letter, he said, was an open one, and he asked Major Evans to read it, which he afterwards did. The letter addressed to Mr. Richardson did not explain the cause of his act, but spoke in affectionate terms of his aunt and younger sister, whom he asks Mr. Richardson to look after and see that she attends school. It also states he has received a letter from his aunt, Mrs. Brown, of Decatur, and he would die with it in his pocket.

A MEETING OF HIS WASHINGTON FRIENDS

WASHINGTON, Oct 23.—[Special.]—Shortly after 8 o'clock tonight about fifty of the friends of the late R. W. Alston assembled at the Metropolitan hotel. They were called together by Mr. E. J. Renick, and that gentleman was chosen chairman. After resolutions had been passed, eulogistic of the deceased, the following gentlemen were selected as pall-bearers to accompany the remains to the railroad station tomorrow: Eugene Speer, M. H. McWhorter, J. G. Zeachry, W. J. Neal, W. G. Griffin, Albert Drane, W. E. Stevens and Lackland McIntosh. The remains will leave upon the train departing from Washington at 11:15 a.m. Sunday and will arrive in Atlanta Monday at about the same hour. Mr. Renick and Miss Minnie Alston and several male friends of the deceased will accompany the remains to Atlanta.

THE DECEASED.

Few young men were more generally known in Georgia, and especially in Atlanta, than was Robert West Alston. He was the oldest son of the late Colonel Robert A. Alston, and was just twenty-eight years old.

"Bob" Alston, as his friends called him, was unusually gifted by nature. His bright, ready wit, and his sunny, loveable disposition won the hearts of those who knew him. He took a partial course at the Virginia military institute when about nineteen years of age, and there became a member of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity. From that institution he went to the University of Georgia, where he remained a year. At both these institutions he was one of the most popular of the students, and the friends he made in those happy days will be grieved to learn of his death.

Soon after his father's death Mr. Alston went to Washington, and there filled, for two years, a position in the office of the sergeant-at-arms of the senate. Subsequently he was employed in the railway mail service between Atlanta and Charlotte. Soon after the inauguration of President Cleveland he obtained a position in the treasury department at Washington, which he held to the time of his death. A few weeks ago he entered the Georgetown law school with the intention to devote his spare time from the department in studies in that institution with a view to the adoption of the law as his profession.

All his recent letters to relatives and friends in Atlanta have been unusually bright and cheerful, and have alluded to the hopes he cherished for the future. The affectionate heart which thus opened itself to those it loved is stilled forever. A more loyal friend never lived; a more generous heart never throbbed. Whatever faults he may have had were those of a noble nature and they were eclipsed by the virtues which made him loved by so many friends. For his sad end there is sincere sorrow in many a heart which will pray that after "life's fitful fever," he may sleep well.

THE FUNERAL.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Trotter of Decatur, Mr. Alston's brother-in-law, left by the Air Line train and will meet the remains at Lynchburg today. The remains accompanied by Mr. Trotter, Mr. E. I. Renick, and Miss Minnie Alston, a sister of the deceased, who was in Washington at the time of his death, and some other friends will arrive in Atlanta tomorrow at half past 12 o'clock. The funeral will occur at Decatur tomorrow afternoon at half past three o'clock. Friends in Atlanta will go out on the 2:50 p. m. train tomorrow. The following gentlemen are requested to act as pall bearers: L. L. Hunnicutt, Arch Avary, Will Kirkpatrick, F. H. Richardson, Charles Floyd, Walter Venable, Shelton Sims and W. R. Cannon. The remains will be laid to rest beside the graves of Colonel Robert A. Alston and Mrs. Alston, in the Decatur cemetery.

Truth stranger than fiction.—Salvation Oil the great pain extinguisher costs only 25 cts.

Citizens' Meeting.

At a meeting held on Friday evening, it was Resolved, That this meeting call a mass meeting of the voters of the city of Atlanta for the 26th instant at half past seven o'clock, p. m., at the courthouse, the sole object of which shall be to nominate a committee of fifty, twenty-five of whom shall be prohibitionists, and twenty-five shall be anti-prohibitionists, which committee shall nominate a ticket for mayor, aldermen and councilmen, and that that committee shall nominate candidates for said offices by a three fourths vote. In accordance with the above resolution, a meeting of the voters of Atlanta is called to be held in the basement of the courthouse.

LITTLE MISS MONSHEE

From the Chambers Journal.

Picture to yourself a neat little figure, habited in a rustling brown silk gown, point lace cap and collar, and black mittens; a small elderly lady, with wild wandering blue eyes and a tremulous mouth, whose uncertain glance and shrinking manner told of some terrible shock sustained by the nervous system in days gone by. Such was Miss Moonshee when I first made her acquaintance.

I was the daughter of a Melbourne merchant and born and brought up in that city, but at the date of my story (1872) we had removed to Richmond, a suburb of the Victorian capital. A strong, active girl of 17, I was daily in the habit of walking up to town to attend classes at a school in —— street. During my walk to and from Melbourne I was more than once struck by the appearance of one of the cottages which I passed. It was a neat little place, painted white, with green veranda posts. The windows which faced the road were full of rare geraniums and ferns, and the trimly kept garden plot was planted with all manner of fragrant old-fashioned flowers and herbs. It was the lady of the cottage, however, who, even more than her pleasant surroundings, interested me. When the sun shone she was always to be seen, dressed in the fashion I have always described, seated under the veranda in a low chair busily engaged in netting. Like Penelope's web, her task seemed endless, and she seldom raised her eyes from her work, which engrossed all her attention. An old Irish woman, who was continually hovering about, either weeding or watering the garden, appeared to be her only domestic. But I was soon to become better acquainted with both lady and servant.

One hot January afternoon I was plodding slowly homeward, my mind full of a certain stiff German exercise required by Herr H. on the morrow. In my pre-occupation I was in the act of passing the white cottage with the green veranda posts without looking, as I usually did, to see if the old lady was in her accustomed place, when a cry of unmistakable anguish from the interior arrested my steps. To unlatch the garden gate and hurry up to the front door was the work of a moment. There, however, I paused undecided whether to knock and offer my services or retrace my steps. While I hesitated the door was opened from within, and the old Irishwoman presented herself, beckoning me to enter. Silently I followed her into a prettily furnished sitting room, bright with pictures, books and flowers. This much I took in at the first glance; my second rested on the evident cause of the old Irishwoman's distress—the pale, inanimate form of her mistress, which lay stretched on a couch near the window. The poor lady was in a dead faint, a phase of indisposition sufficiently alarming to her faithful domestic, who, in agony of tears, asked if it was any use to send for the doctor.

Now, I had had considerable experience in the treating of fainting fits, my mother being unhappily subject to frequent lapses into unconsciousness, from which, acting under the doctor's orders, I had generally been successful in recovering her. I, therefore, spoke reassuringly to old Mally—she had told me her name—and at once set about applying the restoratives to the invalid that I had found so useful on former occasions. In a short time we had the satisfaction of seeing the poor lady open her eyes and fix a bewildered look on her maid, who was on her knees by the couch. Her glance then rested on me with a puzzled expression.

"You have been ill," I explained gently, "and Mally and I have been trying to make you better."

"It is very good of you to take so much trouble with a foolish old woman, my dear," she replied in a weak voice; and the ghost of a smile flitted over her pallid face.

"Ould and foolish!" indignantly repeated Mally, furtively drying her eyes on her apron, and turning a beaming face toward her mistress. "Sure, it's joking you are, Miss Kathleen. And what would Masther Shane say did he hear you miscalling his sweet Kerry rose?"

The old Irish woman's words had a wonderful effect on the invalid. A faint pink flush suffused her cheeks, her eyes shone, so that for the moment she looked almost pretty. The change, however, was but fleeting. The color quickly faded, her eyes resumed their usual expression; and murmuring something to the effect that one is always fair to those who love one, she closed her eyes, as if to shut out some disagreeable recollection. Presently she said, in a low, entreating voice: Oh, Shane, darling why do you linger? Old age is creeping on and I am weary of waiting—oh, so weary. And as she spoke the tears trickled slowly down her thin cheeks.

I was glad when the entrance of the maid with the tea things roused her. Desiring Mally to place the tray on a small table beside her, the little lady sat up and insisted on pouring out a cup of tea for me, apologizing while handing me the bread and butter for what she called her rudeness. "I was overcome with old memories, my dear, so I hope you will excuse me." The tea was strong, and under its stimulating influence my hostess became quite talkative. She told me her name was Kathleen Moonshee; that she was by birth a native of County Kerry, Ireland, but had been for more than thirty years resident in Victoria. "But I have never quite liked the colony, my dear," she said in her gentle way; "and Mally and I would have left it long ago but for a reason of our own. There is a friend, who has promised to join us some day soon, it may be today;" and her eyes brightened. "I cannot tell for certain, however. But when he does come we shall all go home together to the cool, green Kerry meadows and its beautiful lakes. You have heard, I dare say, of the lakes of Killarney?"

I admitted I had read of them, but begged her to describe them, which she did in a rather rambling fashion, stopping frequently to inquire if she were wearying me. At last the clock warned me that it was getting late, and I rose to go.

"Am I to have the pleasure of seeing you again?" asked Miss Moonshee, as she took my proffered hand. "Mally and I are not very entertaining, but we should be delighted to see you if you care to come."

"I shall be very pleased to come," I replied, and shaking her hand heartily, took my leave, being followed to the gate by the old Irishwoman, calling down blessings on my head.

When I told the story of my adventure at home, at the same time declaring my intention of paying Miss Moonshee an early visit, my father laughed and patted me on the cheek. "Please yourself, Polly," he said, "but I am inclined to think your new friend is neither more nor less than a harmless lunatic."

My father's opinion of Miss Moonshee did not greatly astonish me. There was decidedly something peculiar about her; but, argued I, that is no reason why I should not fulfill my promise. So it came about that two days later I again found myself in the little lady's parlor. This visit proved the forerunner of many more, until, from an occasional caller at the white cottage with the green veranda posts, I became the daily visitor and intimate friend of its mistress. I had learned to love poor little Miss Moonshee with a protecting fondness such as the young and strong sometimes entertain for the old and weak. Moreover, to me she seemed the embodiment of that old world romance that, assertive young colonial as I was, I could thoroughly appreciate. And she clung to me, this gentle Irish lady, looking eagerly for my coming, and following me with wistful glances when I took my leave. She spoke but seldom of her past, and although adverting at times to her long-expected friend, seemed, on the whole, to prefer drawing me on to talk of my school friends and studies. Then, on Saturday afternoon, she would warble plaintive Irish ballads to her harp in a wonderfully clear, true voice, the sound of which always drew old Mally from the kitchen. I was accustomed on these occasions to sing "The Wearin' o' the Green" to a piano accompaniment; and when Mally's national enthusiasm was sufficiently stirred by its irresistible pathos and pathos to dash into a jig, thereby setting the old lady to capering like a true daughter of Erin.

Mally invariably apologized to her mistress

LITTLE MISS MONSHEE

Picture to yourself a neat little figure, habited in a rustling brown silk gown, point lace cap and collar, and black mittens; a small elderly lady, with wild wandering blue eyes and a tremulous mouth, whose uncertain glance and shrinking manner told of some terrible shock sustained by the nervous system in days gone by. Such was Miss Moonshee when I first made her acquaintance.

I was the daughter of a Melbourne merchant and born and brought up in that city, but at the date of my story (1872) we had removed to Richmond, a suburb of the Victorian capital. A strong, active girl of 17, I was daily in the habit of walking up to town to attend classes at a school in —— street. During my walk to and from Melbourne I was more than once struck by the appearance of one of the cottages which I passed. It was a neat little place, painted white, with green veranda posts. The windows which faced the road were full of rare geraniums and ferns, and the trimly kept garden plot was planted with all manner of fragrant old-fashioned flowers and herbs. It was the lady of the cottage, however, who, even more than her pleasant surroundings, interested me. When the sun shone she was always to be seen, dressed in the fashion I have always described, seated under the veranda in a low chair busily engaged in netting. Like Penelope's web, her task seemed endless, and she seldom raised her eyes from her work, which engrossed all her attention. An old Irishwoman, who was continually hovering about, either weeding or watering the garden, appeared to be her only domestic. But I was soon to become better acquainted with both lady and servant.

One hot January afternoon I was plodding slowly homeward, my mind full of a certain stiff German exercise required by Herr H. on the morrow. In my pre-occupation I was in the act of passing the white cottage with the green veranda posts without looking, as I usually did, to see if the old lady was in her accustomed place, when a cry of unmistakable anguish from the interior arrested my steps. To unlatch the garden gate and hurry up to the front door was the work of a moment. There, however, I paused undecided whether to knock and offer my services or retrace my steps. While I hesitated the door was opened from within, and the old Irishwoman presented herself, beckoning me to enter. Silently I followed her into a prettily furnished sitting room, bright with pictures, books and flowers. This much I took in at the first glance; my second rested on the evident cause of the old Irishwoman's distress—the pale, inanimate form of her mistress, which lay stretched on a couch near the window. The poor lady was in a dead faint, a phase of indisposition sufficiently alarming to her faithful domestic, who, in agony of tears, asked if it was any use to send for the doctor.

Now, I had had considerable experience in the treating of fainting fits, my mother being unhappily subject to frequent lapses into unconsciousness, from which, acting under the doctor's orders, I had generally been successful in recovering her. I, therefore, spoke reassuringly to old Mally—she had told me her name—and at once set about applying the restoratives to the invalid that I had found so useful on former occasions. In a short time we had the satisfaction of seeing the poor lady open her eyes and fix a bewildered look on her maid, who was on her knees by the couch. Her glance then rested on me with a puzzled expression.

"You have been ill," I explained gently, "and Mally and I have been trying to make you better."

"It is very good of you to take so much trouble with a foolish old woman, my dear," she replied in a weak voice; and the ghost of a smile flitted over her pallid face.

"Ould and foolish!" indignantly repeated Mally, furtively drying her eyes on her apron, and turning a beaming face toward her mistress. "Sure, it's joking you are, Miss Kathleen. And what would Masther Shane say did he hear you miscalling his sweet Kerry rose?"

The old Irish woman's words had a wonderful effect on the invalid. A faint pink flush suffused her cheeks, her eyes shone, so that for the moment she looked almost pretty. The change, however, was but fleeting. The color quickly faded, her eyes resumed their usual expression; and murmuring something to the effect that one is always fair to those who love one, she closed her eyes, as if to shut out some disagreeable recollection. Presently she said, in a low, entreating voice: Oh, Shane, darling, why do you linger? Old age is creeping on, and I am weary of waiting—oh, so weary!" And as she spoke the tears trickled slowly down her thin cheeks.

I was glad when the entrance of the maid with the tea things roused her. Desiring Mally to place the tray on a small table beside her, the little lady sat up and insisted on pouring out a cup of tea for me, apologizing while handing me the bread and butter for what she called her rudeness. "I was overcome with old memories, my dear, so I hope you will excuse me." The tea was strong, and under its stimulating influence my hostess became quite talkative. "Please yourself, Polly," he said, "but I am inclined to think your new friend is neither more nor less than a harmless lunatic."

My father's opinion of Miss Moonshee did not greatly astonish me. There was decidedly something peculiar about her; but, argued I, that is no reason why I should not fulfill my promise. So it came about that two days later I again found myself in the little lady's parlor. This visit proved the forerunner of many more, until, from an occasional caller at the white cottage with the green veranda posts, I became the daily visitor and intimate friend of its mistress. I had learned to love poor little Miss Moonshee with a protecting fondness such as the young and strong sometimes entertain for the old and weak. Moreover, to me she seemed the embodiment of that old world refinement that, assertive young colonial as I was, I could thoroughly appreciate. And she clung to me, this gentle Irish lady, looking eagerly for my coming, and following me with wistful glances when I took my leave. She spoke but seldom of her past, and although adverting at times to her long-expected friend, seemed, on the whole, to prefer drawing me on to talk of my school friends and studies. Then, on a Saturday afternoon, she would warble plaintive Irish ballads to her harp in a wonderfully clear, true voice, the sound of which always drew old Mally from the kitchen. I was accustomed on these occasions to sing "The Wearin' o' the Green" to a piano accompaniment; and when Mally's national enthusiasm was sufficiently stirred by its irresistible pathos and pathos to dash into a jig, thereby setting the old lady to capering like a true daughter of Erin.

Mally invariably apologized to her mistress for "shaking her foot," as she termed the antics she indulged in; then bestowing an admiring glance on me, usually added insinuatingly: "Sure, Miss, nobody as hadn't a drop of the real ould blood could lift the tune as you do."

"You think she has Kerry blood in her veins, Mally?" Miss Moonshee would say, with a smile.

"Sorra a doubt of it; and if Masther Shane heard her play 'The Rocky Roads to Dublin,' he'd say the same."

The little lady's face always reddened at the mention of the foregoing name, and I noticed that immediately afterward she became restless, making frequent excursions to the window, from which she returned sighing heavily. I had long ago identified "Masther Shane" with the dear friend whose advent she anticipated. "Some old lover," I said to myself, "knocking about the world, but still confidently expected by the faithful heart, that believed in vows long since forgotten by the wanderer." Was this how matters stood, or was the much-talked-of friend a phantom of poor little Miss Moonshee's weak brain?

I put the question rather abruptly to old Mally one day when engaged in interviewing her parrot in the kitchen: "Who is Mr. Shane? And do you really expect him?"

The old Irishwoman's face went as white as the table-napkin she was ironing. "What put it into your pretty head to ask?" she inquired, coaxingly, but with a suspicious glance.

"Well, Mally, I have thought more than once that, as the Scotch say, he is lang in comin'."

"You may well say 'long,' Miss," returned old Mally, tearfully. "'Tisn't in this world Miss Kathleen will ever set eyes on him."

"You don't mean to say he is dead?" I exclaimed.

The old woman nodded mournfully, then asked in a whisper if I was quite sure her mistress was asleep. Yes, I was quite sure; she had dozed off while I was playing one of my simple lullabies, and when I stole from the room had fallen into a profound slumber.

"The saints send her dreams of Masther Shane!" piously ejaculated Mally, who, like her mistress, belonged to the "ould religion;" "for 'tis the only comfort she has, poor darling."

"But Mr. Shane, who was he?" I put in, eagerly.

"One of the ould O'Connells, of course. Kings they were before the conquest, Miss, and from first to last an open-handed race. And by reason of that same generosity Masther Shane when he came of age found that, saving the ould hall and 200 acres of bog, sorra a foot of the great estates of his ancestors belonged to him. And now, Miss, I'll tell you the whole story, for it's you desarves to be treated like a friend of the family, so kind you've been to my poor lady." There was a solemn look on her wrinkled face as she made the promise, and without further preamble, old Mally related her tale, somewhat as follows:

"Miss Kathleen and Masther Shane were cousins, and reared together at the Hall by Miss O'Connell, their aunt, for they were orphans. Fine children they were, and they grew up among the kindly Kerry folks, who loved them for their own sakes as well as for the good blood that showed itself so plainly in both. For hadn't Miss Kathleen the bloom of the rose, the eye of the dove, and the sweetest temper in Ireland? And wasn't Masther Shane tall and handsome, with curley black hair, the eye of the hawk, and the bould bearing of the O'Connells? Sure they were made for each other, everybody said, and so they seemed to think, the young master being barely 21 and his cousin but 18 when they were betrothed. Wirra! but sorrow was at hand. Miss O'Connell, the aunt, died, and her income, that had kept them all comfortable, died with her; so, as I said before, except the ould Hall, a bit of wet bog and a trifle of money in the bank, Masther Shane was left penniless. As for Miss Kathleen, her sweet face was her fortune.

"Well, Miss, the poor young masther was nigh desperate; he couldn't tear himself away from his cousin; and if he married her, there was little but starvation before them. 'Twas mighty hard on the young creatures; but the darker things looked, the closer they clung to one another; and however despondent he might be, the masther had always a smile for Miss Kathleen; while she, God bless her, loved the very ground he walked on. I had nursed them both, so it was quite natural they should confide in ould Mally.

"Och, but it was a black day when Masther Shane made up his mind to seek his fortune in Australia. 'Twas young Edward Doyle put it into his head to emigrate. He was the second son of Squire Doyle, of Killibog Castle; and, having a bit of money, he thought he would make it more by sheep farming in Victoria. Miss Ellen, his sister, the toast of the county, and a great friend of Miss Kathleen's, was wild to go with him, and the long and short of it was, Masther Shane, Miss Kathleen and two young Doyles made up their minds to try their luck together in the far-away land.

"Sure, 'twas hard to leave Kerry, where I'd been born and reared; but 'twould have been harder to bid good-by to my darlings; so I up and said I would go with them if they would take me. 'Of course we'll take you, Mally,' says Masther Shane in his joking way. 'We're four giddy young creatures, and it's a quiet, decent body like yourself we need to keep us in order.'

"So it was settled, and before three months had elapsed we had left ould Ireland and sailed for Melbourne in a big emigrant ship. Ah, weary me! but there was sweethearting galore aboard. All the gentlemen were head and ears in love with my young ladies. But Miss Kathleen had no eyes save for her cousin, and Miss Ellen flouted them all to their faces, all but a young English officer, who had a smile now and again from her—just to keep up his heart, she said.

"We took close on five months to make the voyage, and pleased all on board were when the anchor was dropped in Hobson's bay. Melbourne was a small place in the year we landed, more like a village than the great city of today. But the young folks were in high spirits, ready to make the best of everything, even the dirty inn they were forced to put up at the first night ashore. Next day the gentlemen hired a small four-roomed cabin, into which we moved, and where the young things were as happy as the day was long. It had been arranged that Miss Kathleen's wedding was not to take place until Masther Shane and young Dayle had built their house on the land allotted to them somewhere in the western district, the ladies remaining in Melbourne under ould Mally's charge during their absence.

"The night before they left I was cooking the supper in the kitchen, when Masther Shane called me into the parlor. The young Doyles were out, and he and Miss Kathleen were sitting together on the sofa. Her head was hidden on his shoulder, and she was crying bitterly, while he, poor boy, a troubled look on his handsome face, was trying to comfort her, but 'twasn't a bit of use. 'Shane,' she sobbed, ''tis the first time we've been parted, and my heart tells me we shall never meet again.'

"'Mally,' says the masther despairingly, 'what can I say to comfort her?' Then a sudden thought striking him, he turned to his cousin with a smile, and 'Mavourneen,' says he, 'you haven't forgotten the ould story we read long ago of the brave Sir Roland, who sounded his horn in the Pass of Roncesvalles in the Pyrenees, when he was sore beset by the Moors, and how Charlemagne, the great emperor, heard the sound where he was hunting, more than a hundred miles away?' She said she remembered the tale. 'Well,' says he, 'am not I your own true knight, asthore? And, although I haven't a horn like the gallant Sir Rowland, I have something just as good—a stout stockman's whip. So, if danger befall, I'll just fetch a sounding smack with the lash, and here in this cabin you'll hear the noise.'

"He was smiling all the time he was speaking, but Miss Kathleen took it seriously. 'You won't forget,' says she. 'Sure and I won't,' says he, 'if you promise not to fret till you hear the sound of the lash.' 'I promise,' says she, and with that Miss Ellen and her brother came in at the front door, and I went back to the kitchen.

"Well, Miss, Masther Shane and his friend started next day with half a dozen men and four wagons. 'You'll take care of Miss Kathleen,' said the poor boy wistfully when bidding me good-by, 'and should anything happen to me you'll never desert her, will you, Mally?' 'Can you doubt it?' said I. 'But what should happen to one as is prayed for by a pure saint like my young lady?' 'What, indeed,' muttered he, and then he wrung my hand and hurried off to take his last kiss from the sweet lips he loved so well, little thinking 'twas the very last on this side the grave.

"So we were left alone, the two young ladies and myself, in the little cabin in Melbourne. Miss Kathleen kept her word, and didn't fret, though many a time her heart was full. She just went quietly about the house, thinking of her cousin and naught else. 'Twould have been a dull time but for Miss Ellen Doyle. She was the one to be always singing, joking or laughing, and the days sped rapidly until the ninth after the young gentlemen had set out on their journey. 'Twas a Friday night—I remember it well, for sorra bit of fish could I get for dinner that day; and Miss Ellen laughed when I came back empty-handed, and says she: "We shan't dine today, Mally; we'll just wait till tea time." And so they did. Passing nine o'clock they would have me into the parlor. 'For, Mally,' says Miss Ellen, 'we want you to tell us one of your capital stories. Let it be about Kerry.' We were sitting round the table, our knitting in our hands. I was between the young ladies, and had just opened my mouth to say that the story I meant to give them was called the Banshee of Gobkillin, when, without a bit of warning, my darling, Miss Kathleen, gave a sudden start. 'The stock whip!' she cried. 'I heard it distinctly!' Miss Kathleen trembled like an aspen leaf, and calling to mind Masther Shane's words, my heart sank within me. She lay back in her chair without a sign of life, her fair young face convulsed with such a look of terror as I never saw before or since.

"We got her into bed, and then Miss Ellen ran out for a doctor, and chancing to meet Mr. Webb, the surgeon of the ship that carried us to Melbourne, brought him back with her. He was both kind and skillful, and did his best for my stricken darling; but he told us plump and plain that her case was a mortal bad one. 'Twas brain fever she had, and for weeks she lay 'twixt life and death, raving ever and always of her cousin and the danger he was in.

"The fever was at its height, when, late one night, young Edward Doyle knocked at the door. Ochone! but he had the bad news to tell. Master Shane, the last and best of his race, was dead, murdered by the blood-thirsty blacks. It was on the ninth evening after they left Melbourne that the savages set upon them, taking them at unawares as they sat around their camp fire. But a volley from the white men's pistols sent the blacks back into the bush howling like fiends. Then it was that the master, vowing vengeance on the savages, plunged into the wood in hot pursuit of them. The others followed, but in the darkness lost sight of him; nor did they find the poor boy till daybreak. He was lying under a tree quite dead, the blood slowly oozing from a deep wound in his side. He had flung away his empty pistol, but his right hand still gripped the heavy whip with which he had seemingly defended himself against his enemies. They buried him where he fell, under the shade of a blue gum, with only a rude cross at his head to mark where the last of the O'Connell's lay.

"Such was the sad tale young Doyle told us, the tears running down his face the while, for he loved Masther Shane like a brother, and his heart ached for Miss Kathleen. The doctor shook his head when he heard the story. 'Twould be a merciful thing, he said, provided his patient did recover, that all recollection of the past should have faded from her mind.

"She did recover, poor darling, but very slowly. At first we thought her memory was entirely gone. By degrees, however, she began to remember, and by and by asked for her cousin. To please her we said he had gone on a long journey up country, and when we found she believed it Mr. Webb told us to keep up the delusion.

"Well, Miss, there isn't much more to tell. Miss Ellen Doyle married the English officer who was so sweet on her during the voyage out, and went with him to Tasmania. About the same time 'Squire Doyle's eldest son having been killed in the hunting field, Misther Edward was written for by his father. But before he went he had this cottage built and furnished for Miss Kathleen; and he and Mrs. Maj. Gayworthy—Miss Ellen Doyle that was—settled a small pension on my mistress that keeps her in comfort. Here we've lived for over thirty years; and except for the longing she has to see her cousin, it hasn't been altogether an unhappy time for my poor lady. I used to worry myself, thinking how lonesome she'd feel if I were taken first. But since she's come to know and love you, Miss, I've been quite easy; for, should anything happen to ould Mally, I know you'll never see her at a los."

The old Irishwoman had told her tale with emotion. Nor could I for the moment help crediting the supernatural element in the story. But at this moment Miss Moonshee's voice was heard calling me by name, and I hurried to the sitting-room. Never had I seen her more animated. Her eyes were sparkling, her cheeks crimson, and she smiled gaily as I entered. "My dear," she cried, "I have had such a sweet dream, all about the dear friend you have often heard me mention—my cousin Shane. But I must show you his likeness." And with fingers that trembled sadly the poor lady opened a locket she always wore, disclosing the minature of a fine looking youth, with a pleasant expression on his frank, open countenance.

"Is he not handsome?" she inquired, gazing fondly on the smiling face.

"He is indeed," I returned, feeling the tears gathering in my eyes.

"Dear Shane, what a deal he must have gone through! But he is really coming tonight, ah! yes, and then how happy we shall be. I may not tell you my dream to day," she added with a little laugh; "but to-morrow, you will look in to-morrow before you go to church? Then, my dear, you shall know all."

I gave the desired promise, and shortly after bent my steps homeward, meditating on poor Miss Moonshee's sad history and harmless delusion. The morrow found me an hour before church time at her door. It was opened by Mally. "Miss Kathleen has overslept herself," she said; "but I'll just tap and ask if she would see you in bed,, Repeated knocks at her mistress' door eliciting no response, the old Irishwoman turned the handle and peeped in. "She's sound asleep, poor darling," she whispered. "Jhst cast your eyes on her, Miss, and see how pleased she looks,"

I did so. The expression on her face was indeed a happy one, but there was that about it which caused me to step quickly forward and lay my hand lightly on the brow of the sleeper. It was icy cold! Yes, he had come for her at last, the long expected lover. For, gazing on the placid countenance of the dead, who could doubt but a vision of the beloved one had gladdened the soul of the sleeper and left its impress on her smiling face ere death had claimed its prey?

"'Twould be a sin to wish her back, so happy she looks," wailed poor old Mally. "But oh, Miss Kathleen, darling, why didn't you take me with you?"

The separation was but of brief duration. The faithful old Irishwoman soon followed poor Miss Moonshee to the grave, and a white marble cross in a corner of the Melbourne cemetery marks the spot where mistress and maid sleep their last sleep.

Said handsome Tom to smiling Nell,
"Where did you find that mystic spell
That hovers 'round your every smile,
And would my throbbing heart beguile?"
Quoth laughing Nell, "You silly boy,
In SOZODONT—the cream of joy."

TACKLING THE TIGERS.

GOOD STORIES OF THE PRESENT DAY.

A Startling Adventure of Man-Eating Tigers—A Hunt With British Officers in India—A Remarkable Shot of Lieutenant Farrington —A Perilous Position—Etc., Etc.

From the New York Sun.

"I have hunted wild animals in almost every country where they exist," said Captain Kincardin, "and of course I have had my share of perilous adventures. To be a successful sportsman, in the highest sense of the term, requires perfect health and powers of endurance to start with. A man who can't tramp for ten or twelve hours on a stretch, fording streams, climbing hills, dodging jungles and wading swamps, is no good in the game countries. The next things required are nerve and coolness, although the two generally go together. No sportsman of reputation will feel flattered when you praise his nerve. It is something which comes natural to him. When you have only one shot left, and a rhinoceros is bearing down upon you, or a mad tiger is lashing his tail for a spring, or a lion is giving you warning that he considers you his meat, you don't want to make a mistake. In the few seconds left you, you want to do just the right thing. If you are the least rattled your friends might as well write your obituary notice.

"I went out from Bengalore in the fall of 1870 with a party of British officers to hunt tigers. We, of course, intended to knock over anything else in the shape of game, but tigers were the main object. We took the railroad for about a hundred miles up the country, and then secured carts and drivers and beaters at a village, and drove twenty miles to a range of wooded hills, which were greatly cut up with gullies and traversed by several small creeks. The nearest village was in a fertile valley three miles from our camp. The inhabitants were preparing to leave it as we reached the neighborhood. Two man-eating tigers had made their appearance in the hills and created the greatest consternation. Their first victim had been seized from a family circle sitting around a fire just at dusk. He was a boy about fifteen years old, and the beast had seized him by the hip and trotted off with him as a dog carries a bone. She was in no hurry, going at a slow trot, and her mate covered her retreat and menaced the father as he shouted and flung firebrands. The boy's cries were heard for a long time, and next morning many places were found along the trail where he had clutched the grass with his hands and pulled it up by the roots. He had been carried less than half a mile, and all that was found of his remains were two or three of the larger bones and some bloody fragments of clothing. The villagers organized a grand hunt to either kill the tigers or drive them away, but the result was the killing of one man and the wounding of two others, the beasts seeming rather to seek a conflict than avoid one by running.

"The hunt was abandoned and the villagers lived in a state of terror for the next week. The appearance of a single man-eating tiger in the vicinity of a native village creates more terror than fire or flood or epidemic. After a tiger has eaten three or four human beings he seems to loose all his fear of man, and it is a fact that he will eat no other meat unless reduced to fierce hunger. When the natives would no longer go forth to give this pair of tigers opportunities to seize them the beasts invaded the village. The huts were frail structures, with doors and windows guarded by blankets, and the tigers had entered three different places by night and carried off victims. A woman whose husband had been seized related the circumstances with great detail. A light had been kept burning to keep the beasts away, but as the family of five were asleep on the floor at midnight one of the great cats sprang in at the window. It was undefended. This opening, as I saw myself, was only about two feet square. The beast sprang over a child to seize the husband and father, gripping the man by the right shoulder. There was a heavy blanket at the door, and the tiger had not noticed that opening. Of course, all the sleepers were at once aroused, and all set up a great yelling and screaming. So far from the tiger being in the least put out by the confusion, he took his own time and paid no attention to any one but his victim. He pinned the man down flat on his back for a moment, growling in a low tone.

"'Strike him with my sword!' called the man to his wife, but she, poor thing, was too frightened to use the weapon, although it was at hand and sharp enough to have inflicted injury. With his free arm the man caught up a billet of wood and belabored the tiger, but the beast took a firm hold, lifted the man up and sprang for the opening. It was fully seven feet from the floor, and fell back with a crash. The tiger tried it again, but with the same result. He then changed his hold to the man's throat, made a third spring, and after some hard work managed to get out with his victim, though it seemed absolutely impossible for him to accomplish it.

"This occurred on the night before our arrival, and we found the window casing covered with blood and showing the marks of claws. Further than that, the spoor left by the beast as it dragged the body away was plain to be followed, and we ran over it about half a mile to find the spot where the victim had been eaten. We had camped, as I told you, in the hills about three miles from the village. The facts I have given were picked up in the village by an officer and myself, we having galloped over to buy milk and fowls. We were more likely to find the tigers there than in the hills, and a native was dispatched to inform our party that we would remain in the village over night. As the place was surrounded by groves and bits of jungle, it was hard to say from which direction the tigers made their nightly approach. For this reason my comrade, who is Lieutenant Farrington, of the Sixty-eighth native infantry, thought it best that we should post ourselves at opposite ends of the village. There was enough of the afternoon left in which to erect platforms in two convenient trees, and as the sun went down and night fell upon us every native retired indoors, and we began our watch. We had been told that the man eaters sent out no warning of their approach by roaring, as is often the case, but that they came with great stealth, and no one was aware of their presence until too late to escape.

"There were a few cowardly cur dogs in the village, but none of them had been molested by the tigers. One of them took a great liking to me, and when I mounted to the platform to begin my watch he lay down at the foot of the tree. I scolded at him, and flung three or four broken branches at his head, but he refused to go away. It was a balmy evening, with plenty of stars but no moon. One could have seen a man moving many rods away, if he kept in the open, but it was very dark under the trees, and the grass in the openings was two feet high. I was close to the hut from which the man had been dragged, but had not kept my watch long before I realized that it was a great chance if I caught the slightest glimpse of the expected visitors. There were so many dark spots below me and the foliage so obstructed my vision that I had a good mind to descend and seek for some other position. However, I held on, and by and by the village grew quiet and my vigil became a lonely one indeed. The villagers were in a happy frame of mind, believing the man eaters as good as dead or driven to some other district, now that we had arrived. Some of them even neglected to drop the blankets hanging at their doors.

"It had come to be 10 o'clock, and I was wondering if I dared to light a cheroot, when I heard the dog before me whine and move about. Next moment I caught sight of two dark objects stealing across the open space toward the foot of my tree, and realized that the tigers had come. The dog ran out to meet them, singular as it may appear, and then occurred a familiar scene. You have seen a mastiff stand still in all his dignity while a puppy scampered around him in play. Well, the tigers stood there as still as two statues, and the cur ran around in a circle and tried his best to get up a frolic. They at first growled in a menacing way, but as he continued his play they grew better natured, and, after a few minutes, all three were in for a frolic. I could not see as distinctly as I could have wished for, but I made out the movements very well. The tigers jumped over the dog a dozen different times, and on three or four occasions dropped their tails and ran away to let him persue them, but always coming back to the same place. I softly cocked my gun for a shot, but they were so constantly on the move that I dared not risk it. Our object was to bag one or both, instead of driving them away from the neighborhood by a general alarm. The play continued for a quarter of an hour, and ceased then because a child in a hut near by cried out in its sleep. The tigers changed their demeanor in an instant, and a low growl warned the dog that the frolic was at an end. He did not want it so, but scarcely had he renewed his efforts when one of the beasts struck a blow with its paw and laid him dead on the grass. Then both stood stock still, listening for the cry to be repeated. They were side by side, broadside to me, and not a hundred feet away, but in the darkness it was a chance shot. I pulled trigger, and the report of the rifle was followed by a terrible growling and snarling and the sounds of claws at work in the grass. The natives were out in a moment, shouting, screaming and blowing horns, and soon as their torches were alight I descended from my perch. One of the tigers were rolling over and over on the ground, and uttering sounds of rage, while the other had disappeared. I gave the wounded beast a shot through the head, and when we came to examine the body we found it to be that of the tigress. My first bullet had broken her right shoulder, and it was a wonder she did not go off on three legs.

"The lieutenant came running up to compliment me on my luck, and in ten minutes every man, woman and child in the village was in the circle around the dead beast. Everybody supposed the mate had made off for the jungles, as would be the case nineteen times out of twenty, but we were sadly mistaken. While we stood in a circle, with eight or ten torches lighting the scene, the male tiger seized a woman who stood not over ten feet from me, and, before even a cry was raised, had disappeared in the darkness. The lieutenant and myself fired every shot we had in the direction taken, hoping to frighten or wound the beast, and willing to take the chances of hitting the woman, but we threw our bullets away. The victim had a child about two years old in her arms, and she carried this forty or fifty feet before releasing it. As she did not utter a single cry, we concluded that the tiger had struck her a fatal blow as he sprung upon her. The husband and three or four children were there, and they set up such a wailing that it was a relief when they were conducted to their hut at the other end of the village. That tiger was my thirteenth, and Farrington had killed fully as many, but as we compared notes we agreed that we had never known such an instance. A tiger which is fired at from ambush and not hit is overcome by fright, and will travel for miles before halting or make straight for his den and lie close for the next twenty-four hours. That is the rule, but here was a startling exception. The tiger had not only not been frightened away by the reports of our guns and the shouts of the natives, but had remained to select a victim at his leisure, and that with torches blazing in his face and a deafening hubbub prevailing. We could naturally and justly conclude that he was a man eater of the most vengeful disposition.

"When morning came we took up the spoor and trailed the tiger and his victim to a grove about half a mile away. He had only half devoured the body, proving that hunger had not forced him to display such boldness. He had taken his full time about eating, and then made for the hills. Some of the native trackers could follow his trail on a run, and they came upon two places where the beast had turned in his tracks, as if he contemplated a return to the village and the seizure of another victim. That trail was followed to the mouth of a dark, dry gully, with a rocky bottom and sides lined with bushes and the natives would go no further. One of them was dispatched to our camp with word to come over, and in a couple of hours there were five of us white men on the ground with a determination to hunt the big cat to his death. A body of natives were sent off up the hill to beat the gully, and we took our stations in a crescent, each man facing the hill, and none of us over 100 feet from the spot where the trail had been abandoned. It turned out that the gully did not penetrate the hill for more than a quarter of a mile, and after a little the natives got on both sides of it and began to beat toward us. While some blew horns and beat drums, others kept up a fire of stones into the gully, and we felt that the tiger must show himself. The only fear was that his temper would boil over and that he would clamber up the side of the gully and attack the beaters. A frightened tiger would have sought to clamber out instead of following the gully down to the plain, and once he started to bolt nothing would have stopped him.

"The beaters had been at work half an hour when we heard a cry announcing that the man eater was making his way toward the plain, hustled along somewhat by the volleys of stones, but sharpening his claws and growling defiance. In taking up our positions it so happened that Lieutenant Farrington was on my right, in line with the mouth of the gully, and not more than twenty feet from my elbow. He had a double-barreled rifle of heavy calibre, while I had a repeater. In three or four minutes after the cry of warning the tiger appeared in the mouth of the gully, head on to Farrington, and looking him straight in the face.

"'Hold on! He's my meat!' shouted the officer as he brought his gun up, and it became a point of honor with the rest of us to hold our fire. He took cool and careful aim, but his bullet simply touched the skin between the tiger's ears. He dropped like a stone, but was up in an instant, and, with a roar to shake any man's nerves, he sprang forward at the lieutenant. In the tenth of a second I turned my eyes from the beast to the officer, and what was my horror to see a serpent twining itself about his leg and rearing its head on a level with his shoulder. I forgot all about the oncoming tiger, and for the first time in my life my blood seemed turned to ice. Farrington stood with his left foot ahead and his right braced, and as the tiger touched the ground for his last spring the rifle spoke again and the beast rolled over with a ball through his brain. Then, while we all kept our places like so many blocks of stone, he dropped his rifle, seized the snake just below the head with his right hand, and came walking toward us. The serpent writhed and twisted about in its rage, and as it uncoiled itself from the man's leg he flung it thirty feet away. It was rushing back at him when one of the party, with a shotgun at his shoulder, blew its head off.

"'Good shot,' remarked Farrington, as he walked back and picked up his rifle.

"We ran after him and shook his hand, and showered unstinted praise on him for his nerve, but he would not be a hero. It was the presence of the serpent, which was of a highly poisonous species, which had disturbed his first aim. He felt it under his foot, and realized that its bite meant death, but a maddened tiger was before him, and he did not give the snake a second thought. It was the most trying position I ever saw a sportsman placed in, and I am free to admit that it would have upset me. When I came to know the lieutenant better I did not wonder so much over the nerve displayed. It was a matter of record that a tiger entered his bungalow one evening as he sat writing. In getting in, the beast knocked down some articles which made a great clatter and frightened him, and drew the officer's attention. Not having a weapon handy he kicked the tiger about the room until the beast whined for mercy, and crept through the door held open for him."

SKIN TORTURES

That Defy all other Remedies Especially Cured Cuticura.

HUMILIATING ERUPTIONS, ITCHING AND burning skin tortures, loathsome sores and every species of itching, scaly, pimply, inherited scrofulous and contagious diseases of the blood, skin and scalp, with loss of hair, from infancy to old age, are positively cured by Cuticura, the great skin cure, and Cuticura Soap, an exquisite skin beautifyer, externally, and Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, internally.

COVERED WITH SORES.

I have been afflicted since last March with a skin disease the doctors called eczema. My face was covered with scabs and sores, and the itching and burning was almost unbearable. Seeing your Cuticura Remedies so highly recommended, concluded to give them a trial, using the Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally, and Resolvent internally, for four months. I call myself cured; in gratitude for which I make this public statement.
MRS. CLARA A. FREDERICK,
Broad Brook, Conn.

SCALP, FACE, EARS AND NECK.

I was afflicted with eczema on the scalp, face ears and neck, which the druggist, where I got your remedies, pronounced one of the worst cases that had come under his notice. He advised me to try your Cuticura remedies, and after five days' use my scalp and part of my face were entirely cured, and I hope in another week to have my ears, neck, and the other part of my face cured.

A REMARKABLE HUNT.

Carver, the Champion, Beaten by a Georgia Cracker.

From the Albany, Ga., News.

At Powersville, Ga., resides A. C. Clyatt, a man of the most remarkable skill in the use of a shot-gun. As a marksman, he has not his equal in Georgia, and it is doubtful if the world can furnish his superior. Clyatt was born in Fort Valley, Ga., and early developed a taste for field sports which led him to seek his fill of a hunter's life in the distant west. A company engaged in hunting buffalo robes secured his services as a gunner, and for months the subject of this short sketch indulged the wild and exciting camp life of a buffalo hunter, each day killing fifty animals, his quota of the daily "kill." This nomadic life, leading the hunters over the vast extent of prairie in pursuit of buffalo, occasionally brought them in contact with wandering, predatory bands of Indians. More than one sharp encounter relieved them of the monotony of camp life, and gave a spice of danger to what would otherwise have proved an uneventful daily routine.

Attached to the same camp were men engaged in securing the skins of wild dogs and polecats. The carcasses of the buffalo slain during the day, and from which the hides had been stripped, were poisoned, and the wild dogs and polecats, attracted by fresh meat, would greedily devour them only to meet their death. Night after night was this repeated, and hundreds of thousands of skins were thus obtained for use in the manufacture of fur goods. Mr. Clyatt says that of more than a hundred thousand polecats thus destroyed, he never saw any two skins marked alike; they were all noticeably different, some being half white and half black.

Tiring of the hardships of this half savage life, after the pleasures of the sport had palled upon his taste, Clyatt abandoned the camp and drifted back to the quieter but more attractive scenes of his boyhood home. After marrying, he settled among the hills that nestled around the unobtrusive village of Powersville, eighteen miles below the gem city of Georgia, Macon. Though actively engaged in the engrossing cares of farm life, he found time in which to indulge his passion for hunting, and with dog and gun he sought pleasant diversion from the drudgery of farm labors. His success in quail shooting was considered phenomenal by the occasional hunters of his region, and his reputation as a shot rapidly spread beyond the narrow limits of the community.

While at the Centennial Exposition a party of Macon gentlemen arranged with Dr. Carver, the famous rifle and shot gun champion, for a shooting tournament with Clyatt upon his first visit to Georgia. In 1884 Carver visited the State Fair at Macon, and having been compelled to leave his man who assisted him in his exhibitions in Alabama, he wrote to Clyatt to meet him there. Clyatt responded in person the day after, and Carver, to test the skill and dexterity with which he handled a gun, carried a barrel of balls upon a field and sprung them from a revolving trap. The trial must have been satisfactory, as Clyatt broke every ball, and was engaged by Carver to assist him in a series of exhibitions.

After the fair had closed, the field contest with birds was arranged to take place a few weeks later at Thomasville.

The original agreement contemplated the use of a rifle by Carver, but he was given his choice and the champion, knowing the skill of his opponent, chose the shot-gun.

The appointed day at Thomasville dawned auspiciously for the great hunt, and the two, with nerves braced for the test of skill, accompanied by judges and referees, repaired in carriages to the hunting field.

Birds were found in exciting numbers, and the dogs, appreciating that something extra was expected of them, never behaved more beautifully; cautiously they approached and staunchly held every "point" of the field.

Both hunters were on their mettle, and scored with the regularity of clock work, up beyond the fifties, with not a bird's difference. The day ... Thomasville shot away, and after the h... that Clyatt had bagged 94 against Carver's 91. Thus closed successfully for a Georgia shot the most remarkable field test ever had in Georgia.

One incident of the hunt which will prove the cool head and steady hand of Clyatt is worthy of mention.

Carver, frequently, was in range with the bird at Clyatt's turn, and time was lost in his getting out of the way. Clyatt warned him of his danger, but Carver told him to shoot away. A bird flushed, flew in a direction that brought Carver's broad sombrero in Clyatt's way, but he raised his gun and like the flash of thought his experienced eye saw that Carver's head was not in danger, and, with the nerve of William Tell, fired, bringing down the bird, but causing a loss of a few inches of the wide brim of Carver's hat.

The doctor, after that incident, was more careful to keep out of the way.

The hunt over, Clyatt was importuned by Carver to accompany him to Europe, but he refused, preferring to enjoy the comforts of home, where he quietly lives, though, like Bogardus or Carver, he could, by exhibitions of his wonderful skill and dexterity in handling a gun, make an easy fortune.

"I feel that I cannot praise Hood's Sarsaparilla half enough," says a grateful mother whose little son was almost blind from scrofula, and was cured by "the peculiar medicine."

THE SOCIAL WORLD.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK ON THE SOCIAL SIDE OF LIFE.

A Number of Pleasant Paragraphs About the Happenings in Society Circles—The Meetings of Clubs—Several Weddings Past and in Prospect—Notes of Various Sorts.

The social event of the past week was the complimentary german given Monday evening at the Kimball house by the North Side and Nine O'clock German clubs to Miss Helen Moore, of Mobile. Miss Moore is a most fascinating young lady, who has been visiting in the city for several weeks. The german was the most brilliant of the season, and in every way was pleasant and successful. It was led by Mr. Sam Hall, who was ably assisted by Mr. Tom Cobb Jackson, and to whom much of the pleasure of the evening was due. Miss Moore wore a beautiful dress of black tulle, point lace front, sleeveless, en train, and diamonds. The following young ladies were present: Miss Helen Moore, Mobile; Miss Marion Tilley, Richmond; Miss Maude Overly, Madison; Miss Nannie Moore, Mobile, ... Miss Miriam Armstrong, Miss Willie Bell, Miss Carrie Crane, Miss Rose Wylie, Miss Grace Jones, Miss May Peters, Miss Mamie Sanders, Miss Mary Ella Reid, Miss Fannie Colvier, Miss Maude Goldsmith, Miss Allen Bostick, Miss Maude Kirk, Miss Flows, Miss Mary McGhee, Miss Eula Maddox, Miss Jessie Toolin, Miss Belle Creory, Miss Annie Bell Maud, and Miss Franc Jones. The young gentlemen present were: Messrs. Thomas Cobb Jackson, St. Julien Ravenel, Samuel Hall, Charles Crankshaw, Frank Block, Joe Edeleman, Bun Wylie, Frank Stewart, Harry Cassin, Hugh McKee, Shelton Sims, Fulton Colville, Harvey Johnson, Attar Angier, Frank Walker, R. L. Palmer, Alex Hopkins, Thomas B. Paine, Frank Meadow, Robert Freeman, Andrew Anderson, Sanford Gay and Dr. William Perrin Nicholson and Colonel Henry D. Capers. The chaperones were: Mrs. R. Moore, Mobile; and Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Lowry, Mr. and Mrs. Ollie C. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Elgin Lochrane, General and Mrs. J. R. Lewis.

Thursday evening Miss Clara Meyers was married to Mr. W. A. Stevens, Rev. Mr. White officiating. The marriage occurred at the residence of the bride on Calhoun street, and was attended by a large number of friends and acquaintances of the couple. After the ceremony an elegant supper was served. At 9 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Stevens were driven to the depot where they boarded the train for Birmingham, their future home. Mr. Stevens was formerly of this city, but is now in Birmingham where he is prosperously engaged in the tobacco business. The bride is well known and popular in the city, where she has lived for several years. Many handsome presents were received.

Tomorrow evening at half past eight at the Second Baptist church Mr. Thad. Hammond, Jr., will be married to Miss Clifford Putnam. The ceremony will be performed by Dr. Henry McDonald. After the marriage Mr. Hammond and bride will leave for the east. Mr. Hammond is a young lawyer of marked ability, and is the son of ex-congressman N. J. Hammond. Miss Putnam is quite a favorite in social circles in the city, and has many friends here.

The Atlanta Musical association gave the first of its monthly musicales on Friday evening at the new hall, 15½ South Broad street. The entertainment was strictly informal, as it was for the pleasure and profit of the active and associate members of the association, a large number of whom were present. The following programme was rendered under the direction of Mr. Sumner Salter:

PROGRAMME.

1. Overture to "Egmont"—Beethoven. For piano, four hands. Mrs. Sayles Richards and Mr. Sumner Salter.
2. Song—"Embarrassment," Abt. Miss Bessie Redding.
3. Duet—"Life's Dream is O'er," Ascher. Mrs. H. B. Knowles and Miss Martha Flows.
4. Piano duo—"Sclavic Dance," Dvorak. The Misses Schumann.
5. Song—"Looking Back," Sullivan. Mrs. C. H. Chase.
6. Quartette for male voices—"Banish, oh Maiden." Messrs. Deas, Gates, Lively and Salter.
7. Song—"To Sevilla." Dessauer, Mrs. Eva C. Daniels.
8. Part song for mixed voices—"Night," Rheinberger. Select chorus.
9. Song—"Ruby," Gabriel. Mrs. H. H. Knowles.
10. Serenade—"Good Night, Beloved," Balfe. Mr. H. B. Deas.
11. Song—"'Tis I Alone Can Tell," Riegg. Miss Martha Flows.
12. Song—"Forever and Forever," Tosti. Miss Jennie Sin.
13. Piano duo—(a) "Germany," Moszkowski. (b) Valse, Raif. Mr. Carl Katzenberger and Mr. Salter.

The association is making active preparations for their first concert of the season, which will take place in DeGives' Opera House sometime in November.

The musical concert at the First Methodist church, Tuesday evening, was a treat to all who attended. In point of selection and execution no concert given in the city has ever excelled it. The solos were excellent, the chorus work well nigh perfect, and the playing of Mr. Sumner Salter, on the grand organ, was greatly enjoyed by all. It is encouraging to see how well such entertainments are attended, and to notice, too, the great improvements in the entertainments. The leader, Mr. Sumner Salter, and the entire chorus, are to be congratulated on the pronounced success of the concert.

Wednesday afternoon Mr. W. H. Hill, of this city, was married to Miss Mollie Arnold, of Palmetto. The marriage took place at the home of the bride. Immediately after the marriage the bridal party, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hill, Miss Willie McDaniel, Miss Ola Arnold, Miss Lula Fambrough and Mr. J. H. Fambrough, boarded the train for this city. On arriving in the city they were met by friends and driven to their new home on Walton street, where a most elegant dinner was served. In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Hill was at home to their friends, many of whom called to extend congratulations. Mr. Hill is connected with the house of H. A. Fuller & Son. He is a young man of fine business qualifications and enjoys the utmost confidence of his employers. The bride is a pleasant young lady, and in her old home was a favorite with all who knew her.

A dance given at the Kimball house Thursday evening, was an exceedingly pleasant one. Though impromptu it was quite successful and the evening was pleasant to all present. The dancing was continued until a late hour. The young ladies who attended were Miss Helen Moore, Miss Rose Wylie, Miss Jessie Tobin, Miss Carrie Crane, Miss Belle Creory, Miss Mamie Metcalf, Miss Mamie Moore, Miss Maud Kirk, Miss Eula Maddox, Miss Boykin. The young gentlemen present were Messrs. Ike Lovejoy, Andrew Anderson, Lee Harris, Quill Farrar, Frank Stewart, Sim Post, John Lovejoy, Jr., Lieutenant Bridgema, U. S. A., Charlie Tuller, Lieutenant Parker, U. S. A. The chaperons were Mr. and Mrs. Dick Harris, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Wells, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Stevens.

Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Fuller gave a dinner on Friday night, complimentary to Mr. and Mrs. Elgin Lochrane, which was one of the most elegant affairs of the season. Among the guests were Captain and Mrs. R. J. Lowry, Mr. and Mrs. ... Jones, General and Mrs. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. ... Freeman, Mr. and Mrs. Howell Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Grady, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Johnson, Mrs. Livingstone Mims and Mrs. Jos. Thompson.

Friday evening, at their home on Peachtree street, General and Mrs. J. R. Lewis gave their friends a most delightful dinner. The menu was elegant, and the dinner the source of the greatest enjoyment to all. After dinner the guests remained for quite a while and passed the time in social enjoyment. General and Mrs. Lewis entertain in a charming manner, and the affair could not have been otherwise than a brilliant success. The following were present: General and Mrs. J. R. Lewis, Captain and Mrs. R. J. Lowry, Major and Mrs. L. ..., Major Harper, Mrs. Julius Brown, Miss ..., Miss Mattice, Miss Brown and Mr. A. M. ...

The A. N. club will give a reception soon. The time and place are not yet decided on, but it is safe to say that it will be a success, as this club is very popular, and is under the management of young men who always make a success of everything they undertake.

Wednesday night at 8 o'clock at the Second Presbyterian church in Danville, Ky., Mr. Will Plant of Atlanta was married to Miss Lizzie Metcalf. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. B. Martin.

Wednesday night at 8 o'clock at the Second Presbyterian church in Danville, Ky., Mr Will Plane, of Atlanta was married to Miss Lizzie Metcalf. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. B. Martine. Mr. Plane left Atlanta Monday in a special car which was tendered him with the compliments of the Western and Atlantic railroad, with which he is connected. Accompanying him were Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Peters, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. McElveen, Miss May Peters, Miss Brown, and Messrs. Joseph M. and Elijah Brown, Dan B. Harris, W. H. Wimberly, L. R. Bratton, B. F. Wiley, Jr., Dr. W. S. Elkin, George W. Brown, S Walker and C. W. Metcalf, Atlanta; J. W. Glover, Marietta, and R. E. Spragins, Huntsville, Ala.

On arriving at Danville the party was met by friends and given an elegant reception. The wedding was the most brilliant known in Danville. The attendants were:

Miss Sallie Brown, Atlanta, and Mr. W. W. Wiseman.

Miss Shelby and Mr. Joseph M. Brown, Atlanta.

Miss Walsh and Mr. Lawrence Bratton, Atlanta.

Miss Craig and Mr. Elijah Brown, Atlanta.

Miss Davis, Paris, Ky., and Mr. R. E. Spraggins, Huntsville, Ala.

Miss Mamie Metcalf and Mr. W. H. Wimberly, Atlanta.

The ushers were: Messrs. James Lee, Samuel Cheek, Andrew Whitley and Harry Wiseman.

The bride was beautifully arrayed in white silk, with duchess lace and diamonds, and more than sustained the proverbial fame of the blue grass region of Kentucky for its lovely and charming women. The groom is well known as being one of the foremost young men of Atlanta, in sterling business worth and high social standing.

A magnificent reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. Plane at the residence of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Welch, sr., from 8:30 to 12 p. m., at which the beauty and talent of Danville and other points was represented. The presents were numerous and of rare elegance.

The bridal party returned to the city Thursday in their special car, accompanied by Miss Mamie Metcalf and Misses Shelby, of Danville, and by Mrs. C. H. Plane and Miss Snyder, of Philadelphia.

Tuesday evening Mr. W. Taylor Brown, of this city, was married to Miss Julia Higganbotham, of Louisville, Ky. The marriage took place at Christ's church, in that city, and was witnessed by quite a concourse of the beauty and fashion of Louisville. A notable feature of the wedding was that the venerable Rt. Rev. Bishop Alfred Lee, of Delaware, who came over from Chicago to perform the ceremony, was in other days the bride's mother's pastor, confirmed her and married her, and though quite old and much engaged in the convention in session at Chicago, made the long trip to perform the sacred office for the daughter of his old friend. Bishop Lee was assisted in the ceremony by Rev. Charles Craik, rector of Christ's.

The ushers were Messrs. John Barbee, Douglas Sherley and H. F. Davidson, of Louisville, and Messrs Will E. Carter, Charles D. Porter and Edward Brown, of Nashville.

The wedding party arrived at the church at twelve o'clock, and presented an elegant appearance as its members walked slowly up the aisle. The bride, a tall, slender brunette, and an extremely beautiful and intelligent young lady, wore a beautiful costume of white satin, almost covered with old family lace, point applique and point du Brussels mixed. The bridal veil of elegant tulle, and completely enveloped her form. Pearl and diamond ornaments were worn, but no flowers, a bunch of rosebuds being carried in the hand.

Mrs. E. G. Higginbotham, mother of the bride, wore royal purple velvet and lavender satin en train, with bonnet to match and pearls.

Mrs. George Campbell, of Virginia, only sister of the bride, who has been abroad for three years, and who came from Switzerland to attend the wedding, wore an attractive costume.

Mrs. Hugh Gwyn, of Nashville, cousin of the bride, and a beautiful lady, appeared regal in ruby velvet, with bonnet of the same, and rubies and diamonds. Among the other relatives present was Major Hugh Gwyn, of Nashville.

A beautiful feature of the wedding was the manner in which the inmates of the "Home of Innocents, a well known charity institution of Louisville, showed their affection for the bride, who for years has been a devoted friend to the institution.

A large number of the children of the home, accompanied by Sister Emily, the matron, preceded the bride and groom and strewed roses in their pathway. The entire effect, as the gathering moved up the aisle in the mellowed light, was very fine, and elicited the greatest admiration.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. E. R. Higganbotham, whose elegant home, 811 West Walnut street, has for years been the center of a select social circle. The groom was formerly of Nashville but is now a citizen of this city, and is a young man of sterling business qualities. Mr. and Mrs. Brown arrived in the city Thursday, and are at the Kimball house, where they will remain during the winter. The couple received a great many valuable presents in silver, jewelry, bric-a-brac, etc.

The meeting of the Parnell club held last Thursday night, at the residence of Mrs. Colvin, on Washington street, was an occasion of great social interest. The entertainment was opened by a piano duett, by Mrs. Belle Dykeman and Miss M. Savage. These ladies sustained their well known musical reputation.

"Robert, Idol of My Heart," a soprano solo, by Miss Louise Prather, was exquisitely rendered.

Master Josie Schmidt recited "The Famine" in a striking manner.

Mrs. John E. Tyler sang "I am the Bayardine" with a voice which was remarked for its clear volume.

A trio on guitars and banjo, Dr. and Mrs. O'Brien and Mr. Leo Girardey, was a pleasant change to instrumental music.

The gem of the evening was a little play called "Riding in the Streetcar," by the little Misses Eloise Tyler and Julia Stovall.

Miss Bessie Mills recited, with much effect, "Alhambra's Account."

Mr. Stephen A. Ryan, from whom a bass solo was expected, was taken violently ill, and had to go home, to the disappointment of the entire company.

Miss Savage and Mr. J. F. O'Neill, rendered a vocal duett in great harmony.

"The Springtime" was a song by Miss Bessie Redding. An encore was insisted upon by the audience.

The entertainment closed with a quartette, "Charity" by Mrs. John E. Tyler, Mrs. John W. McArther, Miss L. Prather, and Miss M. Savage

Thursday night the Saint Paul dime club gave one of the most delightful entertainments ever witnessed. The programme was a very pleasing one and was executed with great success. Among the participants was Mr. Gardner, of the Evening Capitol, favorably known as "Happy Lon Gardner." He entertained the audience with some of the old time negro style of public speaking, which were loudly applauded, and three times he was encored.

One of the most pleasant social events of the week was the reception given by the "Ladies' Benevolent Union" of the First Baptist church, at the residence of Dr. Roy. The music contributed by Miss Farger, Mr. Orchard, Dr. Huntley and others was greatly enjoyed. Everybody went away expressing the warmest wishes for the continued success of the society.

Mrs. Cleveland's Social Assistants.

From the Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Mrs. Cleveland will have some lovely young ladies inside the cabinet circle to assist her in her receptions this winter. The Misses Bayard will appear very seldom in public, but their places will be filled by the Misses Manning, Endicott, Vilas, and Lamar. Miss Vilas is hardly a debutante yet, but will be allowed to take part in festivities in a limited degree.

Miss Manning, the secretary's daughter, who is "just out," is quite attractive. She assisted her stepmother at her reception last season, and was quite popular. Miss Endicott is a full-flown society lady now, and is very elegant and stately in her manner and movement

The prettiest one of them all is Miss Jennie Lamar, the debutante daughter of the Mississippi secretary. Her mother died over two years ago and she has been living with her married sister in Memphis, Tenn., until this fall.

She is eighteen, tall, graceful and bright. Her hair is golden and her eyes a rich hued hazel. She has the gentle ways and tender, poetic expression of the sunny south. She will be the belle this winter, and will present a charming contrast in blond points to Mrs. Cleveland as they stand in line to receive their fellow citizens.

THE THEATER NEXT WEEK.

Two First-Class Attractions Will Visit Atlanta Next Week.

Wednesday night and at a special Thursday matinee, Mr. and Mrs. George Knight will appear in their famous comedy, "Over the Garden Wall," and Thursday night in another side-splitting comedy, "Otto, a German." The reputation of the irrepressible artists and of their mirthful plays is so universal that it seems hardly necessary to speak of them; yet, as some of our readers might not have seen them, we will reproduce the following testimony of the Savannah News of last Thursday:

"The jingling, whimsical affair called "Over the Garden Wall" was produced for the first time at the Savannah theater last night, and was a screaming hit. Mr. and Mrs. George S Knight and party had a good-sized audience, which was quickly set to laughing, and then was kept laughing through three acts, except when the laughter was so violent that the tears came. The play is funny and the company is exceptionally good. In the cast is Miss Minnie DuPree, a bright and pretty soubrette, quite well known in Savannah as the soubrette of the Fords the past season. Her first appearance on the stage last night was greeted with a hearty ovation. The pretty little favorite blushed, bowed and kissed her thanks to the audience from the tips of her fingers. In the second act she was presented by the Fords with a basket of beautiful flowers and a floral horseshoe with an anchor pendent from it.

Mr. Knight has a capital German dialect and his "Snitz" was very funny. Mrs. Knight, as "Nellie Wrangle," Charlie Frew, as "Moses Wrangle," and Miss Nellie Sandford, as "Mrs. Betsey Snitz," were all amusing. Miss DuPree's "Rosa" was charming, and the St. Felix sisters, with their catchy songs and dances, decidedly caught the house.

The piece is a succession of laughs and has been successful everywhere it has been played."

Friday and Saturday, at night and matinee, Milton Nobles and the charming Dollie Nobles, will present "Love and Law" and "The Phoenix." It is conceded by all critics that these two plays are the best which were ever written by an American dramatist and their immense popularity has proved that this verdict of the critics is right Although the Phoenix has been on the stage ten years, if not more, it receives still the same patronage, and it is a new pleasure, each time one sees it. The Chicago Inter-Ocean gave the following nice notice of Mr. Nobles and his plays:

"MILTON NOBLES.—This clever gentleman has earned a popularity with theater goers, both as an actor and as an author, and the large audience of last evening was flattering testimony to him that he has lost no friends during his several seasons of absence. In his way, somewhat unique, to be sure Mr. Nobles is one of the cleverest men upon the stage, and has turned his talents into a groove in the direction of fortune by methods it is certainly not necessary to condemn. Bright, intelligent, shrewd, capable of delicate flights of fancy and matter of real literary worth, he has ever kept an eye upon the practical side of his profession, and has written for profit, if not at all time for critical approbation. The style of dramatic composition that distinguished "The Phoenix" as an interesting oddity among plays, has been given emphasis in the play now to be seen at Hooley's, a sensational drama equally eccentric—and perhaps more pretentious in character—with "The Phoenix," which it promises to rival in popular success. "Love and Law" must be admitted into the list of strong, effective and exciting plays. Two chief virtues it possesses, exceptional skill in constructive treatment, the business direction being for the most part admirable, and a certain bold delineation of character that in one or two instances is remarkable. The material selected is handled with adroitness and decisive purpose, the results of well-employed experience. The situations are well contrived and sharply defined. The piece has some well drawn characters, by far the best being that of Giovanni Conti, a villainous Italian, a strong dramatic character part most admirably sustained by Mr. Barnum. Mr. Nobles, himself, has chosen a somewhat more legitimate or light comedy role than usual with him, and though departing from the eccentric line that made his agreeable reputation, it cannot be said the new choice was injudicious. A very charming piece of work was the Ritta of Miss Dollie Nobles. A very pretty woman, she plays with excellence and sings quite pleasingly. Good work was done by other people whom we will commend at another time."

A party given by Miss Emma Cantrell on the 11th, it being the eighth anniversary of her birthday, was highly enjoyed by the little ones.

Though the summer has faded and the "season" is over at the resorts, our young people still continue to enjoy themselves. A rainbow party given at the residence of Col. A. J. Vickers on Monday evening was the occasion of much enjoyment to a small party of them.

The girls all appeared charmingly attired in coquettish aprons of every conceivable hue. But it was noticed that each and all were unhemmed and then came the "tug of war." The boys fully equipped with sewing implements set to work to finish each the apron of his lady. For an hour the serious work went on, broken only by the merry peals of laughter from the girls at the awkwardness of their knights of the needle. The fair ones seemed to revel in the misfortunes of the boys and positively refused to lend any assistance in the threading of needles or other accidents. One young man pinned the apron to his knee, fell to work and was, as he thought, getting along swimmingly, but alas! what was his astonishment upon making the discovery that he had sewn it to his plants, at last after many frowns and muttered words the aprons were finished. The committee awarded the prize to Mr. Clint Reese for the best sewing and for the poorest to Mr. W. T. Roberts. Those present were: Mr. Major Strickland with Miss Alzie Wooddall, Mr. Will Barrett with Miss Sudie Cloud, Mr. C. H. Davenport with Miss Mattie Ferguson, Mr. W. T. Roberts with Miss Ford, of Macon, Mr. W. M. Adams with Miss Cuma Floyd, Mr. A. J. Vickers with Miss Mattie Rhodes, Mr. Bob Brown with Miss Janie Wooddall, Mr. Clint Reese with Miss Lizzie Cochran.

ANGOSTURA BITTERS are the best remedy for removing indigestion and all diseases originating from the digestive organs. Beware of counterfeits. Ask your grocer or druggists for the genuine article, manufactured by Dr. J. G. B. Siegert & Sons.

John Keely.

The advertisements of this merchant are pleasant things to read. They bear upon their face the impress of truth as well as an originality of thought—a mercantile genius—which is not often observable in the ebullitions which, from the pen of the advertiser, so often fill the pages of journalism. When a man has something to write about which enthuses his entire nature, however, (and we believe this to be the case with Captain Keely) it is reasonable that eloquence should characterize the talk made on the subject. His record of items of interest to the public in our columns are subjects for thought. The dry goods bills of a family furnish about the greatest expense to which the family is subjected, and therefore it behooves individuals to investigate and find where the most and the best goods can be had for a given sum of money. The volume of John Keely's stock is very great, aggregating something like $250,000 just now. His sales last week have been very satisfactory, and bid fair to be still larger the coming week. Let everybody in search of dry goods give the Captain a call. We feel that they will be glad to have done so. Be sure to read his advertisement in today's issue.

A Clean Office.

Every merchant, doctor, lawyer, and in fact every business man in Atlanta, likes to see a neat office. It helps a man wonderfully in his work. The bookkeeper goes through the duties of the day in a more cheerful and business like manner if he has a neat office; the doctor feels better when he returns from a long visit if his office is in a neat condition; the banker can stand the scarcity of money if his office presents a neat appearance. What makes an office look worse than to see the floor covered with scraps of paper, old pens, etc.? To avoid this, every man in the city of Atlanta should have a waste basket in his office in which to store these things, and the place to buy them is at John M. Miller's book store, at 31 Marietta street. He received a large shipment of them yesterday, in several different styles and shapes, which he is offering at low prices. Call at his store and secure one at a bargain. They will sell rapidly, as they are marked down at rock bottom figures.

The continued warm weather has enabled our New York buyer to strike a big bargain. He bought 350 choice imported Combination Suits at 60 cents on the dollar. They are the newest out, the prices range from $10 to $25 a suit. They are very, very cheap.

Havana Cigar Smokers.

We have received a fine lot of Havana leaf tobacco, and announce to our customers and to the public generally that we are manufacturing only the finest grades of Havana cigars. Using only the finest of imported leaf, and employing only skilled Cuban cigar makers, we feel confident that we can suit the most fastidious smoker. Our Por Larranago, La Corono and La Carolina brand of cigars are equal to any imported goods, and can be purchased at the principal cigar stands in the city.

D. H. DOUGHERTY & CO.

This week in Dress Goods we propose to reach down to the very bottom, and we think the bottom will fall out. We have in stock from the cheapest to the choicest French, English and German novelties in Dress Goods, including handsome lines of Striped and Plain Plush, and VELVET TO MATCH all our exquisite novelties. We not only claim to lead in these goods, but are prepared to prove the worth of our claim on the merit of our goods.

NOVELTIES IN TRIMMINGS

We have every late novelty out in handsome trimmings, including lovely beaded gimps, bead fringes, and hundreds of new trimmings we cannot mention here. It is enough to say that Worth himself could satisfy his most critical taste in any selection he might want to make for Patti, Nillson or Mary Anderson, from our stock of dress goods and trimmings!

IN SILKS

We lead the whole town and state as to quality, price and largeness of stock. We seek no quarter from any source here. Bring in your samples and compare them. Bring them from New York or Boston, and we will match in texture and beat in price. This we guarantee.

We will put our 75c.

Gros Grain Silk

against the factory that made it. This is enough said and you know we always stand up to what we say.

A Big Drive in Flannels.

Red Flannels, Plain.	Red Flannels, Twilled.
White " "	White " "
Gray " "	Gray " "

And opera Flannels In all colors and at prices below any and everybody.

Cotton Flannels from 5c to 25c a yard. We have an immense stock at BIG VALUES, but we don't deceive the public by advertising 15c goods at 7½c. All sensible people know this can't be done. There is no "panic" in the country, and "panic prices" have played out long, long ago.

HOSIERY!

Every imaginable design in fine goods here, and we challenge the United States on our Misses' Black Ribbed Stockings at 20c, and our Ladies' Full Regular in all colors at 20c. We have an extra new man in our Hosiery Department, so great has been our trade in this one department. We can and do defy all competition to get within hearing distance of our big values in Hosiery. We have them at any price, from the cheapest to finest quality, and all at unheard of prices.

Knit Underwear!

A regular slaughter here. We have everything you can desire in these goods, from the most ordinary grade to the best quality. You can't match our prices, and we have no drummers' odds and ends to palm off on an innocent public. Ours are all clean and fresh goods.

WHITE SHIRTS!

We have been having, and continue to have, a GRAND BOOM in our WHITE SHIRTS. They range in price from 25c to $1. Think of a fair quality white shirt for 25c! Our One Dollar Shirt outsells and outfits creation, and they never wear out.

CLOAKS AND WRAPS

Jackets and Jersey Waists. A lovely line of these goods. We have low prices and big sales, and we guarantee to sell more wraps than any two houses in Georgia, This is the kind of talk that tells, for if we didn't have the prices we couldn't sell the goods.

A GRAND BARGAIN.

White Blankets from $1.00 to $15.00 a pair. Bed Comforts by the car load from 50c up, and the best goods sold in this market. We are "the boss" here, and you will do well to make a note of this.

BLACK CASHMERES!

40 inch wide black cashmeres for 50, 65, 75 and 85c per yard. Our 50 and 65c numbers lead the world. We sell a splendid all wool black cashmere for 40c, and we give choice 36 inch wide black cashmere for 25c and 35c per yard. We defy anybody to equal these goods at these prices.

TABLE LINENS!

We are compelled to knock the prop out here so you can hear "something drop." Our stock of table linens is something fearful in size for a southern house to handle. But we bought heavily for a purpose—because we wanted to supply the whole state on these goods. Bleached and Turkey Red Damask of beautiful quality, and your own figures almost. We have all linen table napkins from 65c to $5 per dozen. Our 65, 75 and $1 numbers are winning laurels. We are "deck cleaners" all around in this department, and we close our remarks on this line by saying that our 10, 12½ and 15c towels are creating a sensation.

SHOES. SHOES.

Shoes for everybody, big, little, old and young. A good kid button shoe for $1, a good pebble button shoe for $1, a good kid worked button shoe for $1.25, a good pebble worked button shoe for $1.50, a good kid foxed shoe for $1.50, a good pebble foxed shoe for $1.50. Our kid and pebble goat shoe, common sense and opera toe at $2 can't be beat in the south. We also have a big lot of those long wearing hand made school shoes, also the same for ladies, which are 33⅓ per cent cheaper than any hand made Shoe in Georgia.

A MISSING VESSEL.

THE WRECKAGE FOUND UPON THE LAKE.

A Day of Disaster on Water and Land—A Terrible Railroad Collision in Michigan—A Lake Erie Vessel on Fire—General Telegraphic News of the Day.

SAULT STEMARIE, Mich., October 24.—It is believed that the Canadian propellor, Dominion, has foundered in Lake Superior. She left Port Arthur on the north shore last Monday, and was out in the storm that sent the barge Eureka to the bottom. The steamers that left Port Arthur twenty-four hours ahead of her, passed here forty eight hours ago. The belief that she is lost is strengthened by the report brought here tonight by the tug Charles West, which arrived from Batchelor's bay, northeast of White Fish Point, on the Canadian shore. Captain Coats, master of the tug, reports finding a large amount of wreckage from some propeller adrift between the bay and Parisienne island. On the island was a part of the promenade deck, with the carpet attached. He brought down five state room doors and a cook's house, with the name "Glasgow" stamped on it. The wreckage extends along the shore for several miles. No bodies were discovered, nor could he find any trace of the crew and passengers at any of the fishing stations. The Dominion is a passenger steamer, and it is reported she had between ten and fifteen passengers when she left Port Arthur. Tugs have gone to the vicinity of the wreck to search for the survivors. The shore is almost barren of inhabitants, but there are fishermen's shanties at various points, and there is some grounds for the hope that at least a part of the passengers and crew have escaped.

The overdue propeller Dominion passed down this evening. The wreckage floating about near White Fish point is probably that of the schooner Eureka.

WRECKED ON THE RAIL.

A Disastrous Collision of Two Railroad Trains.

DETROIT, October 24.—A passenger train on the Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee railroad, consisting of a baggage car, two coaches and a sleeper, ran into an open switch at Royal Oak, eight miles from here, late last night, and collided with a heavily loaded freight train. Engineer Augustus Barrett jumped, after vainly trying to stop the train. Simultaneous with the collision, which telescoped the baggage car and the freight car, the cylinder heads blew off, and the escaping steam coupled with the screams and groans of the brakemen buried in the wreck, added terror to the frightful scene. Both engines were completely wrecked. Baggageman John Hennessy and Thomas B. Alexander were buried under the fragments of the baggage car, badly bruised and burned, the contents of the stove having been emptied on their legs. Alexander's condition is critical. John Smedley, fireman of the freight engine was taken from under one of the broken cylinders, the steam from which had literally cooked the flesh of his legs, right side and arms. He will die. Nicholas Lamb, engineer of the freight, was badly cut and scalded. The engineer and fireman of the passenger train, who jumped before the crash, rolled down the embankment and were badly hurt, Engineer O'dell having his shoulder dislocated and being injured internally. Several others received minor bruises. The track is torn up, the rails twisted in every direction, and the remnants of the two engines lie in a promiscuous heap. The loss is not less than fifty thousand.

SHOT THROUGH THE BRAIN.

The Frightful Murder of a Woman in Gadsden.

CHATTANOOGA, October 24.—[Special.]—The details of an awful and most atrocious murder, which occurred near Gadsden, Ala., last night, reached this city tonight. A young man named Euclid Able and his companion, while out riding, stopped to visit the family of Mrs. Cannon. Able had been drinking heavily, and his conduct was so disorderly that Mrs. Cannon had him ejected from the house by his friend. Able was fairly wild from the effects of his frequent potations, and when forced to leave the house his anger knew no bounds. He burst through a door, and gained entrance to the house, however, and made his way to Mrs. Cannon's parlor. As he entered the room Able drew a revolver and fired at Mrs. Cannon before she could move. The bullet sped true to its mark, and crashed through the woman's brain, and she fell to the floor a corpse. Able fled at once, and has never been heard from. He is the son of a leading citizen of Gadsden, and the country is wild with excitement over the crime.

A VESSEL ON FIRE

And Sunk in Order to Save Other Property.

DETROIT, October 24.—This morning a fire broke out in the steam barge William Rudolph, while crossing lake St. Clair. Captain Ryan, of the Rudolph requested the steam barge Cleveland to sink his vessel, and the Cleveland crushed in the Rudolph's stern, causing the vessel to sink, and driving the flames to bow. Later in the day a tug went up from this city and succeeded in extinguishing the flames. Both the vessel and cargo are a total loss. The Rudolph was valued at $22.000. She was loaded with lumber, valued at several thousand dollars.

CANADA GAINS A CITIZEN.

A Distinguished Indianian Forced to Seek New Quarters.

INDIANAPOLIS, October 24.—There are some indications here that Indiana has lost another citizen, and that the Canadian colony has gained a new recruit. Hicklin J. Landers occupied the position of confidential clerk of Landers, Barnes & Co., pork packers, and held a similar relation to Landers, Given & Co., the latter firm running and operating a licensed warehouse. In addition he was senior member of the firm of Landers & Weaver, brokers and commission men. For several days rumors have been current that Landers had practiced the scheme so successfully worked by Neeldo, of Chicago, and the sum he had secured was placed at a large figure, but the facts, so far as ascertained, show losses of about $10 000. Orders obtained money on bogus warehouse receipts, and the banks here are the losers.

The Washington Fall Meeting.

WASHINGTON, October 24.—The fall meeting of the National Jockey club opens Tuesday, and unless all signs fail or the weather proves unfavorable it will be the most largely attended and successful, in every respect, ever given by the City course, and will brilliantly close the eastern racing season. The number of horses here to participate in the various contests is unprecedented, and in point of quality they are equal to the best. The contests are expected to be interesting and sensational.

The Baseball Champions of the World.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., October 24.—The fifth game of the local championship series between the St. Louis league and the American association baseball teams today resulted in a victory for the latter, by a score of 6 to 5. This is the fifth successive defeat which the Maroons have suffered at the hands of the Browns, and by the latter team won the championship. The Browns now the champions of the city, of the American association and of the world.
